PREFACE.

MANY of the cases in this part of the Register of the Kirk Session resemble those which occur in the previous part, and the delinquents are frequently dealt with in a very similar manner; but this is far from being a mere repetition of the former with different names and dates. Transgressions of other kinds also appear, and the old prevailing vices are more severely punished. There are likewise many interesting references to noteworthy matters, old customs, and prominent persons. Some outstanding men become members of Session; and the newly-erected Presbytery, having its seat in St. Andrews, co-operates with the Session in repressing sin and reforming the manners of the people.

Only one obstinate Papist figures in this part, and occasional references seem to imply that they were well nigh extinct in the neighbourhood. In August 1587, it was ‘delatit to the Sessioun that Mr. James Myrton is new cum hame furth of uther cuntreis, and is suspect of Papistrie. Thairfoir the Sessioun ordanit him to be warnit to ansuer to the said dilatioun, and gif confessioun of his faith conforme to the Act of Parliament.’ Thrice was he warned by the officer, and thrice was he publicly cited, but in vain; and for his contemptuous disobedience he was ‘decernit worthie to mereit the sentence of excommunicatioun, and the samyn to be execut aganis him.’¹ In the following December, Mr. Thomas Methven—apparently he who in 1561 had troubled the Session, and who in 1569 ‘abhorrit and detestit al superstition and Papistre’—ratified

‘the haill artclis of religioun professit within this realme, and promist nevir to use in tymes cuming ony uther religion, nor yit that kynd of speking to say that he is nather Papist nor Protestane.’¹ In April 1590, it was decided ‘to request every gentillman, within his awin boundis, to tak diligent inquisition of all incestious personis, adulteraris, fornicatouris, on baptizit bairnis, Papistis, Jesuittis, and of all utheris notabill vices, within the parrochin’;² but in response to this appeal no information seems to have been lodged against a single Papist or Jesuit. In a collection of acts re-adopted in 1595, it is provided that ‘quha keipis ony superstitious dayis, as Zuill day, Peace day, or ony uther holy dayis, or that hes ony uther face of religioun nor that quhilk God of his mercy hes offerit to us, salbe estemit Papistis and sall underly the punischment of the Act of Parliament, and also censorit be ecclesiasticall discipline’; and again that ‘thai quha refusis to communicat with the bretherein, and wilfullie abstrakis thame thairfra, salbe estemit Papistis, and punisit thairfor conforme to the Act of Parliament, and also thoill ecclesiasticall discipline.’³ These are all the references to Papists, but during the same period there are, among others, the following in the Register of the Presbytery:—Lord Oliphant was allowed, in 1590, to receive his son-in-law, the Master of Angus, for fourteen days, under certain conditions; a fast was appointed in 1594, ‘in respect of the dengerous practesis of the excumunicat lordis traveling withe the gentillmen of the cuntrie for assistance’; the brethren were ordered in 1596 to intimate the excommunication of the lords, and ‘to try within thair boindis quha ar traffectoris and moyeneris for them’; in the winter of 1600-1 the Presbytery feared ‘greit danger’ from the resorting of Mr. John Hamilton and other seminary priests within their bounds;¹ on the sixth of May 1602, a suspected Papist was strictly examined;² and two years later a letter was received from the Presbytery of Perth, craving help in seeking redress from the Privy Council, ‘anent the abominatioun of the mesquihilk laitlie wes in St. Johnstoun.’

But although there were so few professed Papists left in St. Andrews, the Session found that the old customs were not easily eradicated. Some parishioners could hardly be prevented from observing Yule, and when the magistrates came to the rescue they received ‘reprochefull language.’ Most of the offenders protested before the Presbytery, whose help had to be invoked, ‘that thei did nocht acknowlege ony holines in that day, moir then ony uther day, nether yit that thei did hailely abstine from wark that day; bot nocht having mikle ado thei past to their pastyme in the feildis and uther places, &c., for the quhilk if thei had faulted thei wald submit tham selfis to the judgement of the Presbiterie.’ Others—including

¹ John Hamilton had at one time been a member of the Session (see p. 399 and n.). The references to him in the Register of the Presbytery are as follows :— ‘December 11 [1600]. The quhilk day, the Presbyterie ordanis the Moderatour to writ to the King’s minister in name of the Presbyterie, to desyre his Majestie to intimat the proclamatioun, maid aganis Mr. Johne Hammyltoun, in Cuper, St. Androis, and uther places neidfull in Fyf, be reasoun of his frequent resorte in thir boundis.’ ‘Januarii 22, anno D. 1601. The quhilk day, the Presbyterie, weying the greit danger that wes liklie to ensew be the resorte of Mr. Johne Hammyltoun and utheris seminarie preistis within thir boundis, hes desyrit Mr. James Meluill, Moderatour of the last Synodall Assemblie, to writ to his Majestie, schewing him that the present necessite cravit the haisting of the Synodall befor the ordinarie tyme; and to desyre his Majestie to writ to the best affectit gentillmen to be present and assist the Assemblie.’

² The record of his examination is well worthy of quotation :— ‘Robert Wode, compeirand, excusand his absence the last day, being posit, 1, how he profest being furth of the contrie, ansueris, he profest na religion; 2, quhy he absentit him self fra the prayeris in the schip, ansueris, quhen his helth permittit he came; 3, tuiching his beadis, ansueris, he brocht them out of Rome, but usit them not for devotioun; 4, quhy he usit ane Papisticall buik, ansueris, it wes Mr. Jon Hayis Demandis, quhilk he usit to instruct him self, nocht to pervert utheris; 5, tuiching his going to the Pope, ansueris, it wes to get gold onlie to sustene his povertie. The Presbyterie referis him to be instructit be the ministeris of St. Androis and St. Leonardis, and ordanis him to resort to them to that effect, and thairefter his satisfacioun to be injoynt.’

one who had offended in the same manner nineteen years before —were ‘moir stubburne,’ and justified what they had done. Four men came under an obligation to the Session that in future they would not keep Yule nor any other superstitious day holy.¹

It was not until the end of May 1599 that the Session learned that a most pernicious custom had been kept up in a remote part of the parish. ‘Being informit that thair hes bene yeirly upon Trinitie Sondag, in Raderny, ane evill custume of pyping, dansing, drinking, and misordour,’ it was ordained that the session-officer should ‘pas upon the samin day to Raderny, and command the fewaris thairof, in the name of God and Sessioun, that thai suffer nocht the lyik ryot and prophana-tion of the Saboth to be usit, bot that thai stay the samin, with certification if thai do in the contrar they salbe punished thairfoir.’ The officer did not go alone, yet he soon discovered that his authority was little regarded in Raderny. On the first Wednesday of June, two women appeared before the Session, and, having confessed ‘thair dansing and ryot on the last Saboth,’ were ordained to make repentance next Sabbath before the pulpit. On the same day the Session found a more sturdy transgressor in David Wemis, who, on being accused for breaking the Act of Session, ‘in allowing the dansing, drink-ing, and ryot usit in the towne of Raderny on Trinitie Sondag last, ansuerit, that custoume wes keipit in Raderny or [i.e. ere] ony in the Sessioun wes borne, and albeit the Session had send sum of thair number for staying thairfoir to Raderny, yit had he and his cumpany bene als mony and als habill, they suld have gottin a meitting, and that he wes nocht in the kirk that day, nather saw that dansing evir stayit befoir.’ This ringleader was ‘ordinit to be imprissoned in the stipill, till he find cautoun to compeir on Sondag and mak repentance for his fault.’ It was also resolved that ‘the haill fewaris of

Raderny' should be warned to appear next Wednesday; and it was added—doubtless because of the difficulty experienced in enforcing discipline on these wayward and distant sheep—'that nane in the boundis of Raderny get ony benefeit in this kirk, except the offendaris satisfie.' The benefits of the kirk, it may be necessary to explain, were baptism, the Lord's Supper, and marriage. Imprisonment in the steeple tamed the spirit of Wemis, and next Wednesday he 'confest his fault in dansing and prophanatioun of the Saboth day and his allowing thairof,' and submitted himself to the will of the Session. He was ordered to make public repentance, and was bound, with his own consent, to pay £10 to the poor, if he should again commit a like fault. On the 20th of June, George Wilson in Raderny was bound 'to ansuer for himself and his familie and cottaris, for keiping the kirk on the Saboth day'; and on the 11th of July three of the Raderny tenants, being admonished, 'promeist nevir to suffer the lyik abuse to be committit be thame selffis, nor na utheris quhome thai may lat.'¹ In the following summer Trinity Sunday was kept in a similar manner in Kincaple. The first batch of the tenants who were accused confessed 'that thair wes sum strangeris com that day thair, and sum prophanation wes usit in that towne, bot thai nather did it nor allowit thairof,' and promised to endeavour 'to stay the lyik in tyme cuming.' Other four of the Kincaple tenants, however, acknowledged that on that day they had played 'at the futball and uther pastyme.' A piper was there from Leuchars, a tailor from St. Andrews, a sailor, one man from Ardet, one from Earlshall, and another from Leuchars. All these were dealt with by the Session. The tailor's case being greatly aggravated by his behaviour on his way home, and by his perjured attempt to clear himself, he was ordained to make his repentance in sackcloth, on the penitent stool, on Friday and Sabbath. When, on the latter day, George Glaidstanes demanded if he had repented of his faults, he insolently replied, that his admonition and the decret of the Session were partly true and partly otherwise. ‘He wes dimittit bot nocht absolvit, and the magistrattis requestit to punishe him condignely.’¹ As this volume of the Register ends in October 1600, and, as the second volume is lost, it cannot now be ascertained whether any attempt was made next year to observe Trinity Sunday in some other corner of the parish, or whether the measures of the Session had overawed its votaries.²

If, as the entries seem to imply, the custom had been kept up since the Reformation, it is amazing how such an observance could have escaped the lynx-eyed Session of St. Andrews for forty years, seeing the village of Raderny is within half-a-dozen miles of the city. It must be noted, however, that the Session had always been over-burdened, the parish being much too large. More than one of the ministers had refused to take the whole charge upon him, and, as Robert Wilkie stated before the Presbytery, ‘for boundis and pepill it mycht weill be four parochinis.’³ Much will be found in this part concerning the negotiations which eventually resulted in the disjunction and formation of the parish of Cameron. Other portions of the parish are now comprehended in Dunino, Ceres, and Kemback; and for many years the minister and Session of St. Andrews had also the oversight of St. Leonard’s parish. The population of the city alone at the Reformation has been estimated at from twelve to fifteen thousand. These figures are probably far too high; but there is some reason to believe that the number increased after the Reformation, until in 1585 it was terribly thinned by the pest. Not only was the parish unworkably large, but the vacancies in the ministry had sadly disarranged matters, and led to much neglect. From Robert Hamilton's death in April 1581 until John Rutherford's entry in July 1584, the congregation may be said to have been without a regular pastor. Robert Pont had been called, and is supposed to have served for a year; but from various statements in the Register it may be doubted whether he came at all. Those three years had been tided over by George Black, and by Thomas Wod, who succeeded him as reader, assisted by Patrick Adamson and the Melvilles. The Earl of March is charged, as Commendator of the Priory, with having colluded with the rulers of the town to keep the ministry vacant, spending the stipend on golf, archery, and good cheer.¹ John Rutherford was one of the victims of the pest in October 1585. At that time, as the clerk puts it, 'all gude ordour cessit in this citee'; and the Register is blank from the 11th of August 1585 until the 29th of June 1586, when Robert Wilkie took his place as minister. Attempts were made, at his urgent and repeated request, to obtain a fellow-labourer, and in the early part of 1590 John Authinleck was chosen; but in September of that year, Wilkie, having been appointed Principal of St. Leonard's College, resigned the pastoral charge of St. Andrews.² Next November, David Black, noted for zeal and energy, was chosen as his successor; but after struggling for a year, and finding that there was no hope of another fellow-helper being appointed instead of Authinleck, who had left for lack of sustenance, he withdrew, and the Presbytery, after trying in vain to retain him, consented.³ But in April 1593, the General Assembly ordained that as minister of St. Andrews he should discharge the duties of ordinary pastor, and nominated Robert Wallace—a man of kindred spirit—as his colleague. On the 19th of September they formally ‘acceptit the ministre of the citee of St. Andrews in and upon thamè, equalie and proportionalie’; and for the better carrying on of their work the town was divided into two parts,¹ each of which was subdivided into seven districts. Black produced the conditions on which he accepted the ministry on the 12th of December. They were, in substance, that Wallace’s ministry should be established and continued with his own, and that the magistrates should with faithful diligence endeavour to obtain universal obedience to the Word and discipline. Never did colleagues work more cordially or more zealously. During the next three years St. Andrews was destined to undergo a more searching and thorough social reformation than it had ever before experienced.

² Alexander Henderson, minister of the neighbouring parish of Leuchars, had to reprove some of his people, in the summer of 1638, for having, in his absence, on a Sabbath ‘run from the one end of the parochin to the other to see a dancing’ (Henderson’s Sermons, Prayers, and Pulpit Addresses, p. 363). Probably this was a remnant or attempted resuscitation of the old observance of Trinity Sunday.

Sins of uncleanness were still fearfully prevalent. Perhaps the very frequency of the appearance of fornicators on the penitent stool had rendered the punishment commonplace and contemptible in the eyes of the people. A perusal of some portions of the Register leaves the impression that at times the Session, in the trial and condemnation of the oft-recurring sin, acted in a somewhat formal manner. But all this was now to be changed. Black and Wallace were determined to put down sin, and they grappled with it right manfully. It had been the practice to free fornicators from imprisonment on payment of forty shillings, but, the very next week after Black produced his conditions, the Session, with the consent of the magistrates, ordained that an Act, which had been drawn up in accordance with the Act of Parliament, should be published on the following Sabbath, and that it should in all times coming be put to full execution against the transgressors. For the first offence each fornicator was to pay forty pounds to the poor, or be imprisoned for eight days, 'thair fuid bread and small drink, and thaireftir to be presentit to the merkat croce . . . beirhedit, and thair to stand, festnit that thai may nocht remoif, for the space of tua houris.' For the second fault, each was to pay a hundred merks, or the imprisonment to be doubled, their food to be bread and water, to be presented to the market-cross, and their heads to be shaved.¹ For the third fault, the penalty was a hundred pounds, or the imprisonment doubled, to be fed on bread and water, to be thrice ducked, and thereafter banished.² Although in every case the full penalty was not inflicted, the proclamation of this Act was no idle threat, for next Wednesday a transgressor was ordained to be punished in conformity with it.

Neither were adulterers allowed to escape so easily as before. A year after the publication of the Act against fornication, a terrible example was made of one of the officers of the town, a married man, who had committed adultery with a married woman. He was put in the joughs, carted through the whole town, then taken to the North Hauch, 'the haill scholaris and utheris, ane great multitude of pepill, upon Mononday ane merkat day, being his convoy, casting rottin eggis, filth, and glar at him,' and 'wes at last dowkit ower the heid diveris tymes.' It was in mid-winter that he was subjected to this treatment, and his civil punishment also included banishment from the city. He had likewise to undergo ecclesiastical discipline. The Session ordained him 'to stand at the kirk dur, beir hedit and beir futtit, ilk precheing day tyme of sermone, fra the secund bell quhill the last bell to sermon, in seclaith; and thaireftir to enter on the hichest degre of the penitent stuill, and sitt quhill the sermone and blessing be gevin, and to cum ilk tyme to the catichisme, and sa to continew quhill the kirk be satisfeit.’¹ In the following March the Session, with the advice of the magistrates, condemned another adulterer ‘to be joggit, cartit, and dowkit, and thaireftir to satisfie the kirk be publict humiliatioun conforme to the Actis.’² This offender was ducked in the sea. In neither of these cases is anything recorded as to the punishment of their paramours.

The most cursory reader of the Register cannot fail to observe that these severe measures had a most beneficial effect in restraining sinners. During the next three years, only five cases of adultery were before the Session. One of these was evidently an old case revived,³ in another it is merely stated that a woman was ‘decernit to be jogit and banisit the boundis of this citie for adulteri,’⁴ while the only connection another had with St. Andrews was the child’s being born here. Such an offence as the last was not likely to be repeated, as the man and his wife who took in the erring female, seemingly a relative, had to pay forty shillings, and make public humiliation, for not giving information.⁵ During the last year of Black’s ministry in St. Andrews, there was not a single case of fornication before the Session. And although the penalties were afterwards relaxed, the salutary results of the wholesome teaching and well-merited punishments were long apparent. It was not until 1599 that the brethren, ‘finding the syn of fornicatioun and huredum grytlie to increas in this citie and congregatioun,’ requested the magistrates to put the Act of Parliament again in execution, and that each offender should pay at least four pounds to be relieved of imprisonment, and ‘sa proportionale to multiplie the samin according to their factis.’⁶

Next to fornicators Sabbath-breakers were the most numerous class of offenders with which the Session had to deal, and there was a multifarious variety in the forms of their transgressions. Of these may be mentioned playing, and its more aggravated form of playing in time of sermon, passing to the fields and keeping no preaching, playing in the fields, playing in the golf-fields in 'tyme of fast and precheing,' 'playing at the gouf eftir nune,' 'playing and casting the hammer,' running through the town 'under silence of nycht,' drinking, drinking in time of sermon, selling ale in time of preaching, keeping market in Crail, travelling to Falkland market, travelling with packs, carrying loads, 'leading of burn,' playing wort, working cloth, 'laying out skynnis to dry . . . on the calsay,' selling fish, 'slaying flesche,' 'delving and sawing of lint,' leading corn, thrashing corn, and, most frequent of all, absence from church. Fleshers, barbers, cordiners, cadgers, maltmen, mariners, pipers, brousters, litsters, millers, and bakers were admonished or punished as they deserved. With all their strictness the Session were not unreasonable. Two cadgers, who confessed their travelling on Sabbath, and alleged that 'the storme of wether stayit thame ower lang in Dundie upon Sattirday,' were simply bound never to commit the like again.¹ Some may think that in fact they were rather lax, seeing bakers were allowed to open their booth-doors betwixt the preachings, and after five in the evening; but 'all furth putting of caseris, for selling of thair bread, at ony tyme upon the Saboth,' was forbidden;² and it was specially ordained that 'na baxter nor tavernour hald furth juigis of wyne, aill, nor bread on the Sabboth, under pane of ten s. for ilk falt, and of publict humiliatioun.'³ Some of the acts give a general idea of how the Sabbath was to be outwardly observed. It was thought good that 'na leadis of victuall, collis, peatis, turffis, hedder, nor na uther geir, be cariit nor brocht in within this citee on the Sabbaoth day.'⁴ 'That diligent triall be takin owklike of sic as abstrackis thame selfis from the sermonis, Sonday, and utheris dayis tyme of sermone, and from the

That na buith durris, mercheand nor na uther craftisman, be opint upon Sonday, nor na uther dayis tyme of sermone, eftir the ringing of the last bell to sermone; and that all caichepellis be then closit; and that na topperis of wyne nor aill prepair ony disjunnis, nor sell wyne nor aill at that tyme; and that nane be fund then drinkand in taveroun nor aill houssis; and that na mercheand, dreipar, flescheour, fischear, nor hukstar sell ony mercheandeis fische nor flesche; and that nane leadis be cariit on the Sabboth day. The transgressouris on the Sabboth to incur the panis contenit in the Act of Parliament, and on utheris dayis tyme of sermone to pay vj s. viij d. to the box of the puir, conforme to the auld actis of this citee, and also censorit be ecclesiastical discipline.'¹ As these extracts show, attendance on week-day services and cessation from work at these times were also enjoined, and latterly they were rigidly enforced.² For the better observance of the Sabbath, masters were held reponsible for their servants and punished for their offences.³ Among those dealt with for 'nocht keiping of the Sabboth day holy and nocht frequenting the sermonis,' was 'Alexis the Apoloniane.'⁴ In April 1600, 'Bessie Miln comperit and being accusit confest hir braking of the Sabboth day, and craved mercie of God, and the Sessioun forgiveness, and with hir awin consent salbe baneist this citie if she be fund in the lyik fault.’¹ A year earlier the magistrates imprisoned five men—one of them a ‘kard’—for three hours, ‘for vagand in tyme of sermone on the Sabath day.’ If they again transgressed in the same way, they were ‘to be censurit and punished with all rigour.’² One result of these efforts, enactments, and punishments was the greatly increased attendance at public worship. In the summer of 1600—there being then no preaching in St. Leonard’s—the huge parish church was so inconveniently crowded that a large section of the citizens had to be sent to St. Salvator’s Church.³

² The craftsmen were not at first inclined to acquiesce in the observance of preaching days, but afterwards became more amenable to the Session (pp. 847, 894, 895). At a later period, the cordiners enacted that those who absented themselves from God's service on a preaching day should pay two shillings; and ordained that, if one of their number should be again 'apprehendit to play at the bowlis or uthir gemmis' in time of sermon on such a day, he should pay forty shillings (p. 634, n.).

As might have been expected, Black took a keen interest in Sabbath observance, and did much to enforce it. When asked ‘to sett down in speciall the heidis and preceptis’ which he desired to be observed in his congregation, he placed in the forefront,—‘that ordour be takin for keiping of the Saboth day.’ The other two were also characteristic of the man, ‘that provisioun be maid for the pui,’ and ‘that the elderis wache and attend upon the maneris of the pepill.’⁴ He not only punished those who drank at home in time of sermon; but also those who, to escape his premature Forbes Mackenzie Act, went to Leuchars and tipped there in preaching time.⁵ According to James Melville, Black was ‘mightie in doctrine’ as well as of ‘singular fidelitie and diligence in the ministerie.’⁶ This estimate is borne out both by the Register of the Kirk Session and the Register of the Presbytery. The latter shows that he was an ardent reformer of abuses of every kind; and that his professional brethren were not overlooked. It was reported in a Synod held at Dysart that he had inveighed against ministers in his preaching, ‘calling sum of them—Pyntaill ministeris, bellie-fallowis, sycophantis, gentillmenis ministeris, leideris of the pepill to Hell; and that a grait part of them war worthie to be hangit.’ In his explanation to the Presbytery, he did not deny that he had used these forcible expressions.¹ Instead of attempting to mince matters, he seems on all occasions to have called a spade a spade; and, for the alleged fault of having spoken too freely in October 1596, he was summoned before the Privy Council in the following month, and on the 2d of December was banished beyond the Tay. Next summer he was debarred from St. Andrews; and Wallace, who had spoken in defence of his colleague, was suspended from the ministry. Their places were soon occupied by George Glaidstones—the future Archbishop of St. Andrews—and by David Lindsay.² Writing in reply to Archbishop Spottiswoode, who succeeded Glaidstones in 1615, Calderwood says:—‘This Black was a man worthy of being remembered by all, on account of the admirable character both of his life and his sound judgment. Selected as a suitable minister for the church of St. Andrews, he so administered the affairs of that distinguished charge that among so vast a multitude of people (there are in fact more than 3000 regular communicants) not a beggar was to be seen, no one dared to violate the Sabbath. But now while things are under the oversight of a bishop and his too numerous assistants, I, the writer of this, less than two years ago, have seen more amusing themselves on the ice at the time of sermon even on the Lord’s day than were present at worship in both churches. On this day the Bishop himself enjoys his games, nor does he, if on a journey and while passing through any town at the time of evening service, condescend to alight from his carriage, he must hasten on to some tavern. About the beggars I know nothing definite, only I do know that the hospital,³ which that illustrious man raised for the employment and education of the poor, now stands empty. The devil envying this ingathering has ruined in the blade this most delightful crop.’¹ It must have been an exceptional occasion when Calderwood saw so many on the ice, for Alexander Henderson, of Leuchars, in preaching at St. Andrews, in 1638, said:—‘Ever since I kent you, in this city, and while I was amongst you, I ever kent you to be diligent observers of the Lord’s day.’² He had known them for well nigh forty years. More than a century later a very different man from Calderwood or Henderson bears emphatic but grudging testimony to the Sabbatical strictness of one of the parishioners.³

Some of the many kinds of offences of which the Session took cognisance may be briefly enumerated. Defamation, ‘flyting,’ ungodly speaking, filthy speeches, banning and swearing, blasphemy, ‘extraordinary drinking,’ ‘drinking ontymously,’ suspicious company-keeping, haunting evil company, mis-spending gear, night-walking, keeping open house ‘in the silence of the nicht,’ ‘singing of bawdry songis, play at durris, dansing and rying throw the town eftir supper,’ ‘tulzeing and ongodlie behaviour,’ ‘filthy handling,’ wrestling and kissing on the causeway, troublesome to neighbours, playing at tables over night, cards and dice, striking, forcible abduction, fighting, bloodshed, slaughter, witchcraft. That offences of so many kinds came before the Session is not to be wondered at, seeing they did not wait until a fama clamosa was raised before they took action. Not only was it the duty of the elders and deacons to report transgressions, but special steps were taken to ferret out gross sins that they might be repressed. For example, in 1586, it was resolved ‘that ane generall delatioun be takin throch the hail town of the offendaris of Goddis law, and of all manifest transgressouris.’¹

In Black’s time a new plan was adopted for putting down banning and swearing. The magistrates and town council agreed that each elder and deacon should have power to fine all those who thus transgressed in their hearing. The penalty was limited to eight pence; and the members of Session, who had to provide themselves with purses for this service, were ordered at intervals to produce them.² In 1595 a somewhat peculiar case of banning was dealt with. A young woman granted that ‘sche said to hir father, The devill tak yow away; and said to hir mother, The devill stik hir! and sche, being commandit be hir mother to do ane honest turn, ansuerit, The devill ane futt will I do it!’ The decret, like so many of the others, is distinguished by its strong common sense. ‘The Session ordanit the father and mother, with thair dochter, all togidder upon Sunday nixttocum, to sitt on ane stuill befor the pulpeit, and ask God and the congregatioun forgifnes; and, if thai tak nocht better ordour with thame selfis and thair barnis, to be banisit the boundis of this citee.’³ A case may be quoted to show how suspicious conduct was dealt with in 1599. ‘Elspot Andersoun and Robert Hammiltoun callit comperit, and being accusit she confest he com to hir in Mr. Johne Methvenis hous, undir scilence of nycht, and that hir maister fand hir in the said Robert his okstar undir his klok, and reprovit him. The said Robert denyit any injurie done be him, and na forder being verifeit, he wes ordinit to crave God mercie; and bayth war admonist nocht to committ the lyik heireftir; and if he be fund doand the contrar it salbe haldin as confest fornicatioun aganis thame.’⁴ Verily, lovers had to behave circumspectly in those days! Some men were brought up for striking, or ‘dinging,’ their parents, and some for treating their wives in that fashion. In April 1594,

The information is added that the ‘haill decrete and ordinance, with the haill circumstancis forsaidis, wer all done with great solemnite as is befoir writin.’¹ Perhaps the worst case of fighting dealt with was that of two men—one of them a tailor—who had a ‘set to’ in the church on Sabbath in the time of preaching. They must have created a considerable sensation, and, as the Register has it, ‘trublit the kirk.’ They were ‘ordinit to mak repentance in sek claith, bear futtit and bair heidit, thrie Sabath dayis in the porche dur, betuix the secund and thrid bell and thaireftir on the penitent stule.’ They were remitted to the magistrates to be punished civilly.²

ing. The first is to a notorious witch, Alison Peirson of Byrehills, who was consulted by Patrick Adamson in his illness, and who was finally condemned by the High Court of Justiciary in 1588. The entry in the Register shows that the attention of the Session was first directed to her by the ungrateful Archbishop in August 1583.¹ The next case was brought up in July 1588. Agnes Melville, whose father had been reader in Anstruther, was twice married, and having picked up some knowledge of herbs used them to cure several people who had 'evill stomokis.' All this and much more she confessed in her long examination before the Session. She knew nothing of the virtue of stones, but had recommended the sick to wash with south-running water, and had given instructions to 'cast furth the watter on the midding, for feitt watter suld nocht be cassin in ony bodeis gait.' Among other things she told how she met, at North Berwick, the old man—perhaps suspected to be the devil—who had given her much of her information. Nothing is said as to what was done with her, and she drops completely out of sight for more than seven years.² When she is mentioned again, it is in connection with the satisfaction enjoined to two widows for consulting with her to cure their husbands. The entry is brief; but it shows that five people were at one time decerned to make public humiliation for consulting; and it implies that Agnes Melville and other two witches had suffered the extreme penalty.³ These are the only references to witchcraft; but there are others in the Register of the Presbytery. Several witches from Pittenweem were, in 1597, burned at St. Andrews. They were condemned by the King, when he was here thrusting Black and Wallace from their ministry. One reason given by the Presbytery for the appointment of a fast was 'the discoverie of the gryt empyre of the deivill in this countrey be witchecraft;' and ere the fast was at an end the same reverend court decided to petition the King to repress 'the horrible abuse by carying a witch about' to detect others—a method they entirely disapproved of.¹ The Laird of Lathocker in 1598—while being himself dealt with for slaughter—consulted the Presbytery concerning Alison Peirce; and not long afterwards it was reported that he had taken Geillis Gray, a suspected witch, from the minister of Crail, carried her to Lathocker, and so tortured her that she was unable to work for her living!²

Numerous as witches were in Scotland, they appear to have been much more plentiful in England. In preaching before Queen Elizabeth, Bishop Jewel exclaimed:—'It may please your Grace to understand that this kind of people (I mean witches and sorcerers) within these few last years are marvelously increased within this your Grace's realm. These eyes have seen most evident and manifest marks of their wickedness. Your Grace's subjects pine away even unto the death, their colour fadeth, their flesh rotteth, their speech is benumbed, their senses are bereft. Wherefore, your poor subjects' most humble petition unto your Highness is, that the laws touching such malefactors may be put in due execution. For the shoal of them is great, their doings horrible, their malice intolerable, the examples most miserable.'³ Bancroft, when Bishop of London, ridiculed half-a-dozen ministers, and other good Christians, who believed that by their prayers a bewitched maiden had been released from the spell. Lewis Hughes, though sent to him by the Recorder with the wonderful tidings, says:—'I . . . could have no audience, and for my pains I was called Rascall and Varlot, and sent to the Gatehouse, where he kept me foure moneths, and did set forth a book wherein he called me, and the rest of the ministers, that did joyn with me in that holy action, Devill finders, Devil puffers, and Devil prayers, and such as could start a devill in a lane, as soon as an hare in Waltham Forrest. All the rest, being men and women of good esteeme and credit, he called, a rout, rabble, and swarme of giddy, idle, lunatick, illuminate, holy spectators, of both sexes, and specially a sisternity of nimps, mops, and idle holy women, that did grace the devil with their idle holy presence.’¹ Bishop Hall bewailed their increase:—‘How busy and prevalent Satan is in this present age, above all former times, appears . . . most clearly in the marvellous multitude of witches abounding in all parts. Heretofore, one of those clients of hell in a whole country was hooted at as a strange monster; now, hundreds are discovered in one shire; and, if fame deceive us not, in a village of fourteen houses, in the north parts, are found so many of this damned breed.’² Richard Baxter, too, bears witness to their numbers. ‘If,’ he says, ‘any should doubt whether there be any such witches, who thus work by the power of the devil, or have any compact with him, he hath as good opportunity now to be easily resolved, as hath been known in most ages. Let him go but into Suffolk, or Essex, or Lancashire, etc., and he may quickly be informed. Sure it were strange, if in an age of so much knowledge and conscience, there should so many score of poor creatures be put to death as witches, if it were not clearly manifest that they were such. We have too many examples lately among us to leave any doubt of the truth of this.’³ Principal Lee has conclusively shown that the penal laws against witchcraft did not originate in Scotland; and he firmly believed that the zeal of James the Sixth ‘against witchcraft, like his attachment to Episcopacy, was assumed for the purpose of ingratiating him with the English nation, where a passion for the wonderful has always been much stronger than in this more frigid climate.¹ Common as this superstition was in South Britain, it was almost infinitely more so on the Continent.²

In estimating the efficacy and value of discipline it must be remembered that real reformation begins at the heart; and it cannot be supposed that all those who were ordained 'to make public repentance' were truly penitent.³ The mere fact that some of them were 'driven' to repentance militates against

² 'No sooner has Innocent [VIII.] placed his commission of fire and sword in the hands of Sprenger and his brethren, and a regular form of process for the trial of this offence been laid down in that unparalleled performance, the Malleus Maleficarum, which was intended as a theological and juridical commentary on the bull, than the race of witches seems at once to increase and multiply, till it replenishes the earth. The original edict of persecution was enforced by the successive bulls of the infamous Alexander VI. in 1494, . . . of Leo X. in 1521, and of Adrian VI. in 1522. Still the only effect of these commissions was to render the evil daily more formidable, till at last, if we are to believe the testimonies of contemporary historians, Europe was little better than a large suburb or outwork of Pandemonium. One-half of the population was either bewitching or bewitched. Delrio tells us in his preface that 500 witches were executed in Geneva, in three months, about the year 1515. A thousand, says Bartholomæus de Spina, were executed in one year in the diocese of Como, and they went on burning at the rate of a hundred per annum for some time after. In Lorraine, from 1580 to 1595, Remigius boasts of having burnt 900. In France the multitude of executions, about 1520, is incredible. . . . In Germany, to which indeed the bull of Innocent bore particular reference, this plague raged to a degree almost inconceivable' (Foreign Quarterly Review, vi. 7, 8). See also Sir Walter Scott's Demonology and Witchcraft, letter vii.

³ In a manuscript volume of sermons on Hebrews xi., preached in Edinburgh in or about 1590, and now belonging to my friend, the Rev. John Sturrock, of the Original Secession Church, the following passage occurs :—'This condemneth all the penitents of our age, all the feined repentances that are drawin out of yow be force of argument and reasoun, and ar not wroucht be the Holie Spirit. That repentance may weill satisfie a visible kirk and put aff for a tyme, bot it will never satisfie the pearceing eye of a living God, quho luikis the hairt and mynd, and is not content with a schadow, bot cravis ane unfained remors, weiping and tearis. Theirfoir they that repent fainedlie, out of questioun they aggredge thair awin dampnatioun : ffor they cum not to glorifie God, bot to mok him in his face, and so they repoint a hevier judgement. Ather theirfoir repent trewlie fra your hairtis, or hold away your confessioun. The thing that ye do, do in sinceritie, that as ye ar humbled outwardlie in your bodie, so your saull may be humbled inwardlie befoir the living God. that. No church discipline can purify men, working in them the power of godliness, for that is the work of God by His Word and Spirit; but it cannot be denied that the faithful exercise of discipline acted as a powerful curb upon irreligion and vice. The amazing reformation of manners effected in St. Andrews during Black's too brief ministry is a striking illustration of the repression of outward wrong-doing at least. The result cannot be altogether attributed to ecclesiastical discipline. His vivid denunciations of God's wrath against sin, and his powerful gospel-preaching, must not be overlooked; and the severe civil penalties inflicted on offenders were not without effect. Those who did not learn to love righteousness were taught to dread the punishment of sin; and the shame of public appearance was designed to deter the innocent, as well as to express the grief of the guilty. It was thus that a healthy public opinion was formed and strengthened, in an age when virtue was lightly esteemed. In discipline much of course depended on the strictness, impartiality, and spirit with which it was exercised. If at any time the Session were satisfied with a mere formal appearance on the penitent stool, little good could be expected to result; but it is evident enough that they were anxious that offenders might be touched with a feeling of their sins, and means were adopted to secure this end. In 1598 David Lentren, 'being fund nocht verie penitent for his sin,' was enjoined 'to keip the catechising for his better instruction.'¹ In 1594, it was 'statut and concludit be the Sessioun that all personis quhatsumevir, quha salbe appointit be the Sessioun heireftir to mak publict humiliatioun, sall cum to the kirk at ilk tyme of the exerceis of the Catichisme, during the tyme appointit to thame of humiliatioun, to learne the doctrine of trew repentance, befoir thai cum to the stuill of publict humiliatioun, that, quhen thai cum to the stuill, thai may ansuer to sic heidis of repentance, as the minister sall propone to thame, befor thai be ressavit.'¹ From an entry in 1599, it is learned that obstinate sinners were so far from being afraid to answer questions in the church, that some of them, in making repentance 'befoir the pulpeit,' uttered 'proud and querelling speiches, testifying thairby the pryid of thair hartis and the litill regaird of God and disciplene.' These, it was resolved, should be 'repellit for that tyme, and put and keipit in pressoun, till thai find cautioun to satisfie on the penitent stule of repentance the nixt Saboth following.'² Perhaps no act made by the Session is more significant of the times than that forbidding accused persons to bring guns or swords with them to the Session, and prohibiting penitents from carrying these weapons to the stool of repentance!³ That a keen interest was taken in the proceedings of the Session is proved by the injunction to the beadle to keep hearkeners from the door and windows of the Session-house.⁴ And that the Session had some regard to public opinion is shown by the fact that the reason why an offender was not subjected to public humiliation was intimated to the people.⁵ The occasional remitting of an offender for a short time, until a voyage was made or the harvest gathered in,⁶ proves that the Session were not unreasonable, and were willing to adapt their rules to the circumstances of their people.

In the olden times the Prelatical party usually twitted their Presbyterian brethren with being too strait-laced and severe in discipline, the common retort being that their accusers were lax and partial. An Act was made in 1612, in the Synod of Clydesdale, under Spottiswoode, then Archbishop of Glasgow, 'for observing ane conform order in discipline.' The thirty-three rules laid down were to be precisely kept by ministers in their sessions, and by moderators in presbyteries, against every delinquent or slanderous offender. They provide for the punishment of those who refused to give confession of their faith—blasphemers—Sabbath-breakers—wilful absentees from kirk, examination, or communion—refusers of reconciliation—abusers of parents—murderers—adulterers—incestuous persons—fornicators—slanderers—drunkards—night-walkers—haunters of suspected places, etc. Most of these rules have pecuniary penalties attached as well as the making of repentance; and some of them are fortified by corporal punishment, imprisonment, and the joughs. They are certainly severe enough, the chief difference from those in this Register being that the penalties are all apparently enjoined by ecclesiastical authority.¹ In the Acts of a Diocesan Synod, held by Archbishop Sharp, it is provided:—‘that, for the lifting of the customary mulcts from persons convict of scandal, the minister and Session within burgh may interpose with the magistrates that they may exact the fines according to law, and deliver them to the Session, to be employed for the use of the poor; and that for the landward, the former way used by parishes may be continued; and if they find it not effectual, that the minister and Session may make their address to the Lords of his Majesty’s Council, that they may be pleased to grant a commission to some persons in the parish for uplifting their fines, to be employed to the use of the poor and pious works.’² A somewhat superficial examination of the Register of the Kirk Session of St. Andrews during Sharp’s primacy leads one to suppose that the modes of discipline were very much the same then as they had been a century earlier. Andrew Honeyman, who was promoted to the see of Orkney in 1664, had, as one of the ministers of St. Andrews, frequently presided in the Session, both in Presbyterian and Prelatic times, and he was not disposed to admit that discipline was administered more slackly in the latter.³ In England, too, ‘the registers abound with examples of the severity with which the Church in former times maintained its authority by compelling notorious delinquents to do public penance, and by excommunicating offenders against ecclesiastical discipline.’¹ So late as 1797 the parish church of St. Mary, Lambeth, was so crowded that several hundreds of persons could not get admission, because a publican was to ‘do penance in a white sheet’ for calling ‘the domestic female of a neighbouring baker by an improper name.’² And less than half a century ago, it was the custom at a missionary station of the Church of England near Calcutta, in the ‘case of notorious and flagrant crimes, to suspend from communion, and to make the delinquents stand in a conspicuous place during the whole of the service.’³

As in the period covered by the previous part of the Register, so in the period covered by this, much of the time of the Session was taken up with other matters than the punishment of offenders. Fresh regulations were made concerning the proclamation of banns and celebration of marriage, and to one at least of these a penalty was added in 1594. After that date, persons presenting themselves to be contracted were not only to be refused, if unable to repeat the Lord’s Prayer, Creed, and Commandments, but were to be fined forty shillings for their ignorance.⁴ Marriages were to be celebrated on Fridays as well as on Sabbaths and Wednesdays;⁵ pledges were to be consigned by those contracted;⁶ and claims of adherence were still dealt with.

The care of the poor was one of the chief duties of the Session. Funds for their support were raised in various ways. Nearly all the penalties of transgressors were appropriated to this end, voluntary alms were collected for them, compulsory contributions were levied in their favour, notaries in making wills were to remind clients of their claims, the possessors of altarages were asked to demit them in their favour, vow-silver dropped in for their behoof, the hospital was provided for them, and their medical attendance was paid for. All this was done most systematically—a roll being kept, a special box for their money being made, collectors and treasurers regularly appointed, and rules enacted for the using of their ‘broddis.’ Their souls as well as their bodies were attended to. Latterly they were catechised in the hospital each Sabbath, and attended prayers in the parish church each Monday. In connection with the poor much discrimination was shown; all and sundry were not put on the roll;¹ and citizens were forbidden to let their houses to poor beggars or strangers, without licence of the magistrates. In October 1597, it was concluded ‘that, quhen ony puir body cryis for almous at ony part of this citee, thai be takin and apprehendit be Thomas Wilson, and puit in the thevis hoill, quhill triall be takin of thair esteat.’² Eighteen months later, begging at the ‘yettis or durris of the inhabitantis’ was also forbidden.³ At the same time, almsgiving at funerals was prohibited, the mourning relatives being directed to give the money to the treasurer, that it might be distributed at the sight of the elders and deacons to the poor with the rest of their alms. On the 19th of June 1583, the seventeenth anniversary of the King’s birthday, his Majesty being then in St. Andrews, seventeen poor men were selected as the recipients of a blue gown and a purse containing seventeen shillings. In return they were to pray daily for his Highness, and to attend the prayers and preaching in the parish church, each clad in his blue gown.⁴

Special attention was paid to the sick. At the censuring of the elders, in May 1596, Wallace was desired to be ‘mair diligent . . . in visiting of the seik’;¹ and in the same month it was ‘statut that ilk persone within this congregatioun, howsone that ony persone be seik within ony familie, sall adverteis the elderis of the quarter of the persone seik within xxiiij houris, that the ministeris may be adverteisit to cum and confort thame with holy admonitioun, and that under paine of publict humiliatione; and if the elder be advertesit and signeifeis nocht the samyn to the minister, he sall also mak publict humiliatione; and this to be also under pane of ten s., to be upliftit upon ilk persone transgresand; and this to be publict Sondag nixttocum.’² From an entry in 1598, it may perhaps be inferred that at that time the members of Session visited the sick in weekly rotation;³ and in 1599, one of the reasons given for dividing the town into nineteen quarters was the better visiting of the sick.⁴

The burial of the dead was also under the charge of the Session. In 1587 the landward parishioners were summoned, inter alia, ‘that thai nicht help and support to the clengeing of the buriall’;⁵ in 1588 the Dean of Guild, ‘at the earnest suit of the Sessioun, promist to caus mak ane bier to burie the deid’;⁶ and in 1591, the beadle and his man were taken to task for burying an illegitimate child ‘under silence of nycht, the majestratis nocht being advertisit.’⁷ Among the Acts ratified anew in 1595 there is the following:—‘For convoying of the deid to buriall, alsueill puir as riche, it is statut that all inhabitantis of this cite, specialie in that quarter quhair the persoun is departit, thai, with the elderis and deaconis of that quarter, with thair wyffis, convoy the deid to buriall, under pane of vj d., to be upliftit of ilk persoun disobeyand; and that nane be buriit bot betuix the son rysing and down passing thairof; and that nane be buriit nather tyme of sermone nor dennar.’¹ Another of the Acts ratified at that time shows that some of the citizens had no respect for the burying-ground. It runs thus :—‘It is statut that nane presume to flaik dicht dry nor pak woll nor lint, saw treis, dicht malt corne, pak nor dry skynnis, in the kirk yaird, nor fyle the samyn, nor do ony uther labour nor handling thairin heireftir, and that nane bring thair doggis to the kirk, under the pane of viij s., to be upliftit of ilk transgressour, sa oft as thai failye, to the box of the puir. And that every maister of hous, maister of scole and baikhoussis, tak diligent cuir of thair barnis and familie, that thai transgres nocht in the premissis ; and that nane play in the kirk yaird nor cast stanis upon the sklatis under the pane foirsaid.’² It was laid down in 1589 as one of the duties of the session-officer, ‘that unkowth and strong beggaris be keipit furth of the kirk yaird, and als all barnis fra playing thairin tyme of sermone and prayaris, as at all uther tymes fra breking of the wyndowis and casting on the sklaitis.’³

There are many interesting references to the administration of baptism in this part of the Register. Children were not to be brought indiscriminately to the church for this sacrament, but the father of the child, or in his absence a faithful neighbour, was to inform the reader and two members of Session on the previous evening, lest any illegitimate child should be inadvertently baptized ;⁴ and again, the reader was instructed ‘to pas and tak suir triall of sic barnis that ar to be baptizit, and quha ar the barnis parentis, and quhidder thai be laidfull or nocht, and quhidder thai haif maid satisfaction or nocht that ar adulterous or fornicatouris parentis, that the barnis of sic be nocht baptizit without repentance preceid.’⁵ ‘For eschewing of misordour and tumult, and satling of the abuse enterit in the ower great number of witnes or gossopis,’ it was concluded that the witnesses asked by the parents should sit in their own seats, ‘and nane to stand up, tyme of baptisme, bot the parent and father of the barne haldand up his awin barne him selfe onlie, except tua or thre witnes at the maist.’¹ It was afterwards enacted that any one desiring baptism for his child should bring the elder or deacon of his quarter ‘to testifie that the parentis of the said barne frequentis the hering of the Word, and in thair famileis thair is na suering nor banning.’² Though people had occasionally to be dealt with for neglecting to get their children baptized, and one man had to make public humiliation in sackcloth, ‘with ane papir about his heid, bering his falt writin thairin,’ for allowing his child fourteen weeks old to die unbaptized,³ yet very many fornicators, and even adulterers, were extremely anxious that their progeny should receive this ordinance. Indeed, this desire to secure baptism for their children often brought offenders under the notice and power of the Session. No one was allowed to dispense the sacraments, in any case, unless duly authorised; but John Downy, one of the roughest men in St. Andrews, in passing through Strathkinness, took pity on an adulteress who could not get her child baptized, and performed the ceremony in presence of her neighbours. As may be readily imagined, the punishment meted out to him was none of the slightest.⁴ In 1587, ‘conperit ane puir barn, born be umquhill Margret Moncur, incertane quha is his father, and maist humlie on his kneis rehersit the Lordis Prayar and the Beleif, and desyrit the Session for Goddis saik to grant him baptisme.’ It need hardly be said that the Session complied with this request.⁵

⁴ Pp. 563, 567-570, 572.—It was alleged that Andrew, Earl of Rothes, was the father of the child in question, and it was named Alexander. Usually, it is stated that Alexander Leslie, the covenanting general, was the lawful son of Captain George Leslie of Balgonie; but it has been asserted that he was a natural son of a Banffshire laird (Spalding's Memorials, Spald. Club, i. 130); and Rawson Gardiner avers that he was ‘an illegitimate son of a Fifeshire laird’ (Fall of the Monarchy of Charles First, i. 195). Perhaps some one may yet be able to identify him with the child baptized by John Downy.

In 1584 it was resolved that a register of baptisms should be kept;¹ and in 1600 it was ordained that intimation be made 'that these quha hes bairnis to be baptizit heireftir sall nocht only cum to the minister quha sould baptize thame, bot also to Mr. Robert Zule, quha hes the Register of the Baptizme, that he may have the parentis names, and that he gif ane tiquot thair of to the minister, that thai may be callit befor baptizme, and nane uthirwayis to be resavit.'²

The previous part of the Register contains the earliest known reference to the use of communion tickets or tokens in the Reformed Church of Scotland;³ and in this part there are suggestive references both to tickets and tokens. In May 1590 it is stated that 'Patrik Gutherie, at command of the Sessioun, hes maid the ironis for streking of the takynnis to the communion, and hes ressavit fra the Sessioun for his panis xl s.'⁴ Next July the Session 'payit to Patrik Gutherie, for twa thowsand taiknis to the communion, ten merkis.'⁵ These tokens were undoubtedly made of metal, but it is perfectly certain that the tickets were not always metallic. In 1596 it was enacted 'that na persone heireftir sall wreit tikkitis to the communion . . . bot sic as the Sessioun sall ordane to that effect';⁶ and, in 1600, it was 'thocht expedient anent the geving of tiquotis to the communion, to be celebrat the tua nixt Saboth dayis, that everie tiquot [bear] the personis name, the examinaturis name, with ane mark thairon to designe the first Sondayis tiquotis fra the secund.'⁷ In 1583, one man had produced 'ane fangyeit tikket,' at the Lord's Table; and another had presented himself with 'his maisteris tikket.'⁸ Although wilful refusers to communicate were liable to excommunication,⁹ it must not be supposed that all were allowed to

It is expressly stated, 'that na persoun be admittit to the communioun, but sic as confessis the treuth with us, and substractis nocht thame selfis frome precheing and catichising; and that can say the Lord his Prayer and Ten Commandimentis, and that can ansour to the questionis of the Litill Catichisme; and thai be xvj yeiris of aige.'¹ All the people were still rigidly examined before each celebration of the communion. Special examiners were appointed for the four quarters in June 1584, April 1585, March 1587, March 1587-8, July 1588 and April 1589,² and on other five occasions the examinations are mentioned although the examiners are not.³ These examinations usually began two or three weeks before the dispensation of the sacrament; but in the summer of 1600 six weeks were allowed, and although the work was 'to continew morning and evening the haill ouk dayis except in tyme of preaching,' it was necessary to delay the celebration for another week—'the landwart pepill nocht being yit examinat be thame, nor thair names tane up in roll, nather is the pepill of this citie all examinat nor utherwayis prepared as thai aucht to be.'⁴ Thrice it was intimated that those who failed to pay their contribution to the poor would not be admitted to the communion; and on one of these occasions the people were informed that those, who were 'debarrit thairfra for lafull caussis,' would be 'punished accordingly.'⁵ From July 1584 to May 1590 the Lord's Supper was dispensed yearly to the town's people; and to the landward parishioners in August 1583, August 1587, August 1588, June or July 1589, and July 1590. Commissioners from the town complained of their minister to the Presbytery, in September 1591, 'for the not ministratioun of the sacramentis.' Black replied 'that he acceptit not the ministrie simpliciter on him, but in houp that sic a portioun suld be allotit to him of the parochin as he mycht be abill to deal with in conscience, in administra-

This is the only occasion during Black's incumbency that the celebration of the ordinance is directly recorded; but from a reference in May 1595 it may be inferred that it had been dispensed shortly before;² and in April 1596 the 'ordour anent the communion' is set down, implying that it was to be celebrated almost immediately.³ The privilege was twice enjoyed by the citizens in 1597, namely, in October and December;⁴ and likewise in July 1598.⁵ In November 1597 the landward parishioners desired 'that thai may haif the communion ministrated to thame and thair famileis and tenentis, being fund habill eftir triall, and the rest of the benefits of the kirk;' and declared 'that thai haif nocht gottin the communion thir sex yeiris bigane.'⁶ It was dispensed to them accordingly in August 1598.⁷ In the spring of 1599 it was celebrated on two successive Sabbaths; and in 1600 on the last two Sabbaths of February, and the first two of August.⁸ It had been customary to have two celebrations of the ordinance on the same day. On the 24th of March 1593-4, it was ordained to be 'baith in the morning and at ten houris, that the samyn, as use is of befoir, may be done in cumlie ordour.'⁹ In July 1598 the preaching was to begin at five o'clock in the morning, and, as only those who were present at the beginning were then to communicate, the doors were to be locked 'at the ending of the Psalme;' while for the celebration in the forenoon the preaching was to begin at nine o'clock.¹⁰ It was probably to supersede this double celebration on the same day, that in 1599 and 1600 it was spread over two successive Sabbaths. In these latter years special steps were taken to remove 'all eilestis and feidis' for the better preparation of the people; and fasts were also held—held, indeed, on the communion Sabbaths.¹ Sacramental fasts were not a novelty in St. Andrews. They had been observed during Robert Hamilton's ministry.² There are references also to preparation services on the Saturday afternoon preceding the communion.³

Some of the duties imposed on the session-officer throw a curious light on the past. On the 2d of January 1582-3, he was commanded 'to lett na person enter in the presson hous to the pressonaris, to beir cumpanie with thame in extraordinar drinking and wantownes; nor to lett na sustentatioun cum in the presson hous bot sic as aggreis with the Act of Parliament; and that the dur be closit fast at sex houris at evin nichtlie, and nocht opnit quhill the morn at day lycht; and this command to stand in all tymes cuming, as he will ansuer upon the executioun of his office.'⁴ In October 1589, ten precepts were drawn up, which he was to observe under pain of deprivation:—'In the first, that he nor his man nather ask nor craif money fra na persoun that hes thair barnis baptizit, nor that ar contractit in mariage, onles it be gevin frelie and na forder. Secundlie, that the knok be kepit in gude ordour.⁵ Thridlie, that the bell ring ilk day, Sonday and uther dayis, at fyve houris in the morning, and at fyve houris at evin to prayaris, and at aucht houris at evin, ane quarter of ane hour, and that the last bell to sermone or prayaris ring continewalie quhill

Fyftlie, that the hand bell pas nocht throch the town tyme of sermone nor prayaris . . . Auchtlie, that the kirk fluir be watterit, and the pulpeit and daskis in the kirk be sowpit and haldin clein. Nyntlie, that he cum ilk Twysday to the scribe of the Sessioun, and ressaif his direction quhom he suld warn to the consalhouse. Tentlie, that he remane at na tyme in consall, bot to depart quhen he hes gevin his ansuer; and that the towall and the bassin be sett on the pulpet at the secund bell to sermon.¹ Despite the rigour of the Session, the officer, influenced maybe by that familiarity which breeds contempt, was not always so deferential and compliant as was desired. ‘For his ungodlie and unreverend behaveour and spiches in Sessioun,’ he had to sit in sackcloth before the pulpit, and there crave forgiveness.² Again, he and his assistant were ‘decernit to mak publict humiliatione, for drinking in the brousteris’ on a Wednesday in time of sermon.³

Sometimes the members of Session themselves acted indecorously. One deacon was struck off for non-attendance, disobedience to the magistrates, and for being ‘ane evill payer of his dettis’;⁴ another was declared incapable of office for the ensuing year for speaking against the magistrates;⁵ and, worst of all, an aged elder had to be deposed for adultery.⁶ The most common failing of the members was apparently their irregular attendance at the meetings of Session; and in December 1599—almost at the close of the volume—the reason leaks out. ‘The bretheren undirstanding perfytlie that divers personis of thair number the tyme of sessioun passis to the feildis, to the goufe and uthir exercise, and hes no regard for keiping of the Sessioun conform to the actis maid thairanent,

At all events it is enough to prove that our Presbyterian fathers were not the gloomy and fanatical bigots which they are occasionally represented to have been. And this Register shows that they only objected to their people playing at golf or football, or casting the hammer, when such games were indulged in on Sabbath, or in the time of preaching on week-days; but playing at cards and dice they uncompromisingly opposed. An excellent opportunity was given to the members of Session to find fault with one another, had they been so disposed, at the privy-censuring. The process was gone through both in May and October, 1596, and also in March 1598-9. The first of these is the fullest and most interesting. They began with their ministers. Black having been removed, nothing was objected against him, but ‘all the brethrein praisis God of him, and that he may contenew in his feir.’ Wallace being next removed, they also thanked God for him, but expressed the wish that he might be ‘mair diligent and cairfull over the maneris of the people, and in visiting of the seik.’ Zule being removed, no fault was found with his life, doctrine, or conversation, but he was to be ‘admonisit of multiplicatioun of wordis in his doctrine, and that his nottis be in few wordis, that the people may be mair edifit.’ Andrew Melville being removed, there was ‘na thing opponit aganis him, bot the hail brethrein thankis God for him.' For none of the remaining thirty members were thanks given, but against twenty-four of them there was 'na thing opponit.' Faults of various kinds were laid to the charge of the others. One paid nothing to the contribution for the poor. Another had been in company with those who broke up the tolbooth door, and elected the Town Council in time of sermon; and there were doubts as to some things he had done while in the King's service. A third was on bad terms with his father, a fourth was charged with going to the Synod without command of the Session, and a fifth was admonished to 'mend his rasche speking in the Sessioun,' which he promised to do. The clerk was told 'to be mair diligent in noting the penalties and faltis in the kirk.'¹

As mentioned in the Preface to the former part, the yearly election of the Session was kept up here until 1600. There are indications that in some parts of the country it was practised to a much later period, lingering even to 1705.² To the close of this volume deacons were still counted members of Session, and did work, some of which would now be considered to belong exclusively to the elders, and some of which even they would now decline. They assisted at the Lord's Supper and made up the roll of communicants.³ Of the nine appointed in 1596 'to serve the taball with bred and wyne,' eight were deacons, only one was an elder.⁴ The deacons as well as the elders were to 'tak tryall of all faultis and enormiteis' within

In small communities, deacons have a voice in all the business of the Kirk-Session, but in large consistories they have a separate chamber, where are exclusively discussed all matters relating to the poor. Both the elders and the deacons remain in office for two years; and should their services be again solicited, which frequently happens, re-ordination takes place' (Steven's Scottish Church in Rotterdam, p. 383).

In 1595 it was 'statut and concludit be the Sessioun that nane sall remane with us in Sessioun, nather at voting nor yit in cumpanie, bot sic as ar allowit of the maisteris of the collegis, and ar sworn with us nocht to reveill ony thing intreatit in this Sessioun.'³ But in 1597 the newly elected elders and deacons, in ratifying the acts and statutes, excepted 'that act concernyng the maisteris of the college nocht to haif voit in Sessioun.'⁴ This was the first election after the places of Black and Wallace had been supplied by Glaidstanes and Lindsay; and, contrary to the former custom, there was not a single member of the University chosen. The matter was brought indirectly before the Presbytery by Andrew Melville in May 1602; and it was then agreed that the old custom should be again followed.⁵ It will be found that previous to 1597, men like Andrew Melville, James Wilkie, John Johnston, William Welwod, and James Martine, had been regularly elected.

During the period covered by this part of the Register, Patrick Adamson came little in contact with the Session; but when the 'Black Acts' were passed in 1584, they feared that they would not be allowed to meet. The Archbishop, however, assured them that neither King nor Parliament wished 'to inhiebeit the convening of the elderis and deaconis of ony congregatioun within this realme, . . . bot onlie to inhiebeit the new erectit Prisbittreis.' The Session, at his urgent request, agreed to meet 'as thai haif in tymes bygane'; but they took the precaution to obtain his signature to the minute.¹ By one of these obnoxious Acts, Adamson, with the bishops and certain commissioners to be appointed, were empowered to 'put ordour to all materis and caussis ecclesiasticall within thair dioceissis';² and that no doubt was the reason why, two months afterwards, the minister proposed to the Session whether they should 'follow furth the auld ordour observit in this sait sen reformatioun in religioun, in punising of transgressouris, and inobedient personis to the voice of the kirk, or to remit the offendaris to the Bishope to be punisit.' By plurality of votes it was decided 'that the Sessioun keip thair auld accustomit use, quhill forder order be takin be the Kingis Majestie and his Gracis Esteatis.'³ Adamson and the Session were not always on good terms. In December 1586 he gave them mortal offence, by alleging in a sermon that some within the town had said that the flock of St. Andrews were goats! There is no reference to the dispute in this Register, but in that of the Presbytery it is so fully set forth that an abridgement of it must suffice here. On the 29th of December the Presbytery ordained 'Mr. Patrik Adamsone, alias Constine, to be summoned to compeir the nixt Fuirsdays to answer and giff in his reassonis and causis quhy he altered his ordiner text of preaching upone Sonday befor none, the xxv of December; and to giff his warrand and author for that, that he called the flock of Sanctandrous gaittis, as he alledgit was reportit to him to have bene spokeng be some within the sayd towine.' On the 5th of January he appeared before the Presbytery and acknowledged that 'he altered his text, and in his teaching alledgit that sowme within the said towine hed¹ called the said flock gaittis.' He affirmed that in altering his text 'he meaned na superstitione,'² and that 'he teachit that day of the nativitie to schew him selve to be disagreand and dissasenting fra the Neoteriks that hes wretting of the birthe of Christ, quhome Mr. Androw Melvine followis.' Four commissioners were present desiring that the matter might be handed over to the Session, 'in respect the said Cessione is ordiner judge to all the congregatioun of the said towne, and the said Mr. Patrik, being ane of the said congregatioun, the said commissioneris desyrit that' he 'might be tried befor the said Cessione at the first instance.' The Session had evidently perfect confidence in their own authority and ability to try the Archbishop; and the Presbytery called neither in question, simply answering that they could not remit the trial because they had already entered into the process, but desired some of the Session to be present. Besides the commissioners for the Session, James Wilkie also appeared in name of the rest of the congregation, and 'cravit maist earnestlie that the said Mr. Patrik suld find and declar the author of these wordes' he 'spak in pulpit,' calling 'the flock of Sanctandrous gaittis,' otherwise 'they wald hald the said Mr. Patrik authour, inventour, forger and

Adamson 'maid na ansuer, but declynit the judgement of the Presbyterie, and offerit to produce ane Act of the Generall Assemble, eximying him fra all triall and judgement of all inferior judges quhairsumever, the nixt Fuirsdays.' This the Presbytery ordered him to do 'subscrivit with the clarkis hand of the said Assemble.' The Archbishop did not appear next Thursday; but there 'comperit Mr. Henrie Hammyltowne, messinger, and, be vertew of our Soverane Lordes lettres, chargit the moderator of the Presbyterie and everie member thair of to desist and ses¹ fra all farder proceeding in the matter and actione, in leading of proce[s], aganst the irreverend (sic) father Patrik Adamsone for quhatsumever [deid] or occasione bygane, inhibeting the saidis persones thairanent quhill [sum] farder ordour be tane and triall thairintill, under the pane of rebe[llione] and putting of the saidis persones to the horne.' After receiving this charge the Presbytery contented themselves by demanding at each brother on his conscience concerning Adamson's 'calling the congrega[ti]one of Sanctandrous gaittis, giff they knew the author thair of, and [in] speciall giff in any wayis they knew or hard Mr. Androw Mel[vine] in any wayes or any tyme speak the saidis wordes or the ly[k]. The Session had so long ruled St. Andrews in ecclesiastical matters that the newly erected Presbytery was possibly regarded at first as somewhat of an interloper; and, when differences of opinion did arise, the elders and deacons were not inclined to submit tamely. In September 1587 the Session, in desperation, petitioned the Provost, Bailies, and Town Council for help.³ Unfortunately, the Register of the Presbytery is blank from 20th April 1587 to 9th October 1589; but the 'questionis fallin out betuix the Presbittrie and the Sessioun,' which necessitated the appeal to Cæsar, seem to have referred to the proclamation of banns. Afterwards they apparently worked very harmoniously, although the Session did not yield an implicit blind obedience;¹ and the older court derived great help and support from its immediate superior. The earliest volume of the Register of the Presbytery extends from the 13th of October 1586 to the 12th of December 1605. It was long supposed to be irretrievably lost, but was accidentally discovered by Dr. Buist.² Such a volume is well worthy of being printed by this Society at some future time, when fewer works are in hand than at present. Having had the privilege of examining it, I have given a good many extracts bearing on men and matters mentioned in this Register, and others illustrating the relationship existing between the Presbytery and the Session.

Great as was the assistance received from the Presbytery, the Session were quite as much, probably more, indebted to the magistrates. Municipal politics occasionally ran high in those days in St. Andrews, as they sometimes do still, and traces of party feeling are discernible in the Register; but some of the magistrates were always elected members of Session, and generally were ready to act in their double capacity as a terror to evil-doers. In the Preface to the former part, the question of the infliction of civil penalties was briefly discussed,³ and with this second part in type much more might now have been said, but lack of space forbids. On this point, as on others, too much stress must not be laid on a single expression. For example, it is stated that an offender was 'jokit, cartit,' etc., 'be decrete of the Sessioun'; but it is added, 'this wes also done be vertew of ane decrete of ane condigne assyis.'¹ Attention can only be called to two short entries bearing on the manner in which the magistrates carried out the behests of the Session. In 1593-4, each bailie was requested 'to put the actis to execution upon transgressouris within his awin quarter';² and in February 1598-9, to obviate the confusion which this plan involved, the Provost and bailies agreed that they should in future, 'ilk ane per vices, his weik about,' 'put in execution the ordinances of the Sessioun, and put ordour to personis disobedient thairto.'³ But the help of the magistrates was by no means confined to the execution of decrees, witness a resolution adopted in 1600:—'It is concludit that the ministeris and baillies of this citie sall pass togidder and viseit the samin citie, and to tak sic ordour that na evill disposed nor ydill personis have libertie to duell in sic ane reformat congregation.'⁴ There was a touch of humour as well as zeal in those old bailies. Casual references have already been made to some culprits whose heads were adorned with paper inscribed with their offences. In one case the bailies specified that this head-gear was to be in the form of a mitre!⁵

When rebound it was interleaved; but unluckily the original leaves are not all in their proper order, and many of them have no year-date. A sixteenth century clerk attempted to partially remedy the latter defect, but not quite successfully; and for some mysterious reason has occasionally altered the year-date and made it wrong—1591 having been, almost in every case, changed into 1590. In my extracts I have given the true dates.

The social state of the people was such that the combined powers of Presbytery, Session, and Magistracy were needed to repress disorders; and yet the bulk of the citizens must have been on the side of law and order, or these bodies could not have acted as they did. There were a number of wild fiery spirits ever ready for a fracas or daring outrage, and there was a 'rascal multitude' to appeal to. Threatening a deacon, challenging an elder to fight, or even railing on the Provost and bailies, were comparatively trivial offences.⁶ A brother of the Laird of Forret lay in wait, with a servant, for three hours, for Thomas Douglas, the minister of Balmerino, ‘invadit him and drew his bluid.’ On being desired to satisfy for this, he cut his glove, and casting down half of it to Douglas, in presence of the Presbytery, dared him or any of his kin to take it up.¹ A tailor, under silence of night, attacked Thomas Wod, the aged reader, intending ‘to have maist schamfullie murtherit’ him.² On a Sabbath day, Robert Wallace ‘wes invadit be William Learmonth, younger, . . . maist unreverently and undewtifullie with bosting and thretning behaviour in the face of all the peipill, immediatlie efter his furthcoming of the pulpeit, . . . quhairby gryt skaith of bluid micht have fallin furth throw the tumult rasit be him, war nor that the Lord of his mercie stayit the samyn.’³ At a meeting of Presbytery, and in presence of brethren from the Synod, William Arthur exclaimed, in reply to Wallace:— ‘Thow leis falsly, and ether sall thow deny that word and aett up, or it sall cost me my lyffe!’ The Presbytery, ‘being maist heily offendit,’ sent for the magistrates; but, ‘nochtwithstanding of thair presens,’ Arthur ‘utterit the lyk wordis in gryter pryd and rage of hairt.’⁴ In such outbursts of unbridled passionate men the recklessness and daring were open; but what palliation can be urged for Patrick Learmonth, a son of the Provost, who took a quiet shot at Archbishop Adamson on the Links?⁵ No doubt it was in time of sermon, but Learmonth was not one of the appointed visitors, nor was such a mode of capture authorised. Some of the difficulties experienced in curbing such men can be realised by a perusal of the dealings with the Arthurs for the murder of James Smith.

There are at least seventy references to the penitent stool, more than a score to the stool of repentance, several to the stool, a couple to the stool of public humiliation, half-a-dozen to a stool before the pulpit, one to a high stool before the pulpit, and another to the ‘penitent stule of repentance.’

⁵ Calderwood’s History, viii. 224.

These could not all have been the same stool, because there are references to 'the highest degre of the penitent stuill;' and on one occasion the stool is distinguished as 'ane stuill laiche in the kirk, beneth the place of repentance,' and on another as 'the penitent stuill betuix the pulpeit and publict place of repentans.' Sometimes the offender was condemned to make humiliation before the pulpit—no stool being mentioned. One penitent was to sit beside the precentor, and another was to make humiliation in a seat near the pulpit. A woman, who kept a child too long without baptism, was decerned to sit upon the penitent stool, and to bring the child with her!

To some people the most interesting entry in the Register will be the short one telling how Patrick Adamson came before the Session 'allegeand him to haif verball directioun of the Kingis Majestie, to desyre the minister and redar to pray publiclie for his Hienes mother, for hir conversioun and amendiment of lyfe, and if it be Godis plesour to preserve hir from this present danger quhairin sche is now, that sche may heirefter be ane profitabill member in Christis kirk.' Never dreaming that that very morning the unfortunate Mary Stewart had been led forth to execution, the Session resolved 'that the minister, at ilk sermone, and the redar, at ilk tyme quhen he sayis the prayaris, pray publiclie for the Kingis Gracis mother as is desyrt.'¹ It may also be stated here that George Douglas, afterwards Sir George, who helped Queen Mary to escape from Loch Leven, was an elder in the Session for several years, that his house is mentioned as the division between two districts, and, as thus marked out, it may still be seen, with his initials and arms over the old gateway.

Among the other items of interest that may be pointed out are those relating to Thomas Wod of Psalter fame, the collection for the French Kirk, the choosing of texts for the minister, the seating of the church, the removal of the women's seats 'for eschewing of trubill,' the comedy in St. Leonard's College, the prohibiting of an Englishman 'to mak ane publik play,' the bringing of the best scholars of the sang-school to help to sing the Psalms on Sabbath, and the alteration of one of the preaching days and Session day to Tuesday, to commemorate the King's deliverance from the 'Gowrie Conspiracy.' Much may be learned from the surnames occurring throughout the volume; but, although there is an apparent attempt at phonetic spelling, allowance must be made for the fancy or ignorance of the clerks. A witness named Barclay is mentioned four times, and on each occasion his name is spelt in a different way:—Barthlhlath, Barclaytht, Bartclaytht, Barclaitht.¹ Judging from the clerk's attempts to take down his name, this witness probably lisped. Perhaps the most amusing transmutation is that of Spandemager into Spaidmaker. There are at least two specimens of double Christian names, Henry Adam Foulis and Ellen Allan Mac-kewyn. The prevalence of some Christian names is remarkable, and still more so is the infrequency of others. Only one Mary, or Marie, occurs in the whole Register. Do we owe the commonness of this name in Scotland now to the memory of our unfortunate Queen?

This part has been edited on the same principles as the former, and the proofs of the text have been as carefully checked. The extracts from the Register of the Presbytery, the Hammermen's Book, the Baxters' Book, and the Cordiners' Book,² have been carefully taken; but I have not had the opportunity of again comparing them all with the originals. Some portions of the Register have been written very hurriedly, the letters running into one another. And, for example, may be found in various stages until it actually becomes ad. In such cases I have given the word as the clerk evidently meant it to be. It should perhaps have been mentioned in the Preface to the former part that contractions have not been reproduced in the foot-notes, unless when there was a special reason for doing so; and inverted letters have been treated in the same way. A copious Index to both parts has been added, and facsimiles are given of the entry concerning Queen Mary, and of the signatures of Patrick Adamson, David Black, Robert Wallace, and George Glaidstones. By permission of the Senatus Academicus of St. Andrews, a reduced facsimile of a drawing of the parish church from the original sketch in Oliphant's St. Andrews Delineated, 1767, is given as a frontispiece. So far as known, this is the only drawing of the church after the Reformation and before the extensive alterations of 1798.

² Since this Preface was written, Mr. D. C. Smith, watchmaker, has handed over to the St. Andrews University Library, for preservation and reference, the Cordiners' Book, the box and documents of the same craft, and also the box which was kept by the Convener of the seven incorporated trades of St. Andrews, with its remaining papers.

In spite of every care, a few errors have crept in. Readers are requested to correct the serious one which occurs on p. 268.

I have again to thank Dr. Mark Anderson most cordially for the great help he has given me, and also Mr. Law for suggesting the insertion of the year-date in the headline, and for directions in compiling the Index.

¹ The first entry on the 9th of May 1582 (supra, p. 481) shows that Robert Pont had not come to St. Andrews at that date; and this entry proves that at the end of October there was no ordinary pastor in the congregation. It was of this time that James Melville wrote:—‘The session of the kirk haid a custome to send twa of thair eldars everie ouk to desyre Mr. Andro and me to helpe tham on the Sabbathe, during the want of a minister and absence of the Bischope.’ Perceiving that the Prior and the rulers of the town wished to keep the charge vacant, the Melvilles hinted this from the pulpit, after which a purse of money was offered to James Melville for his labours; but he declined it, fearing, ‘giff thay gatt a fason of a ministerie sa easelie provydit, they wald be lang of bringing in an of the notable men nominat to that ministerie, . . . they haiffing George Blak to minister the sacraments and marie, and us to teatche, wald content thairwith and seik na mair.’ Having explained the matter to the Presbytery, that court discharged the Melvilles from preaching, and ordained James to pen a letter stating the reasons. ‘Quhilk being done, and publicklye read, certean of the rewlars of the town . . . ragit thairat, and pennit against the nixt day an answer, in effect and termes unreverent; denying the authoritie of the Presbyterie, calling it pretendit, and inveying against the sam: for the quhilk cause, the persone that red it, Ringand Rewll, taker upe of the Psalmes, being callit befor the Presbyterie, schew that Mr. David Russell and Wilyeam Lermont commandit him to reid it; bot, pure man, he gat his reward, for he never threave nor did guid efter that, bot died with madnes and miserie. ² The fate of this poor woman is only too certain. James Melville says, that, from April 1582 until August 1583, 'Bischope Adamson keipit his castle, (lyk a tod in his holl,) seik of a disease of grait fetiditie, and oftymes under the cure of women suspected of witchcraft, namlie, an wha confessit hir to haiff lernit medecin of an callit Mr. Wilyeam Simsone, that apeired divers tymes to hir efter his dead, and gaiff hir a buik, etc. This woman being examined be the Presbyterie, and fund a wiche, in thair judgment, was giffen to the Bischope to be keipe in his castle for execution, bot he sufferit hir to slipe away; bot within thrie or four yeirs thairefter sche was takin, and execut in Edinbruche for a witch^e (Melville's Diary, Wod. Soc. p. 137). From Melville's statement it might be inferred that when she was at length executed she suffered under the judgment of the Presbytery; but she was tried and condemned by the High Court of Justiciary in 1588, and curiously enough the entry in the text shows that while her case was brought before the Presbytery by the session, it was the Bishop who called the attention of the session to her. According to Sempill's scurrilous Legend of the Bishop of St. Andrews Lyfe, this was the third witch consulted by Patrick Adamson. There she is described as—

'Ane carling of the Quene of Phareis,
That evill win geir to elphyne careis;
Through all Braid Albane scho hes bene,
On horsbak on Hallow ewin.'

Dalyell's Scottish Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 321.

Of the thirteen jurymen who tried her six were St. Andrews men, and of these four were maltmen. Three of them as deacons were members of the Kirk-session, viz., David Guidlett, maltman, Charles Watsoun, notary, and John Hegie, maltman. From her confession it would seem that she was far from being an old woman, although 'scho wes cuming and gangand to Sanct Androus in hailling of folkis, thir saxtene yeiris bypast.' Her relative, Mr. William Sympsoun, 'tauld hir that the Bischop of Sanct Androus had mony seiknessis, as the trimbling fever, the palp, the rippillis and the flexus; and baid hir mak ane saw and rub it on his cheikis, his craig, his breist, stommak and sydis: and siclyke, gaif her directiounis to use the yow mylk, or waidraue with the herbis, claret wyne; and with sume uther thingis scho gaif him ane sottin fowll; and that scho maid ane quart att anis, quhilk he drank att twa drachtis, twa sindrie dyetis.' As a Scotch quart is equal to an imperial gallon the Bishop must have had a royal draught. 'The particulars of the procedure which took place in court, and of the sentence pronounced against this unhappy woman, are not inserted in the Record: there is merely a marking in the margin of the Record, "Convicta et combusta." The scene of her suffering was likely the Castle-hill of Edinburgh, where, after being "wirreit at ane staik," she would be "brint in assis" (Pitcairn's Criminal Trials, vol. i. part ii. pp. 161-165).

entitled:—‘Ane Act dischargeing all jurisdictionis and jugementis not approvit be Parliament, and all assemblies and conventionis without our Soverane Lordis speciall licence and commandement’ (Acts of Parl. of Scotland, iii. 293). By another of these Acts, Archbishop Adamson, the bishops, and certain commissioners to be appointed, were empowered to ‘put ordour to all materis and caussis ecclesiasticall within their dioceissis’ (Ibid. iii. 303). Adamson’s statement in the text, that the King and Parliament only wished ‘to inhibeit the new erectit Prisbittreis,’ is far from accurate. See M’Crie’s Melville, second ed., i. 221 et seq. It was probably in case of danger, that the kirk-session secured Adamson’s signature to this entry.

² Probably five yopindales or zopindalers. The Joachim thaler, a silver coin of the sixteenth century, varied in value from fifteen to twenty shillings Scots, and was popularly known as the yopindale.

² Mr. Agnew has said:—'All that the refugees sought and obtained was the opportunity of earning their own livelihood. They suffered none of their people to solicit alms. They maintained their own poor, a large portion of their congregational funds being devoted to this purpose. And so grand and resolute was their determination in this matter, that when the convulsions of a time of war made their trade low and their cash little, their London consistory (or vestry, as the English would have said) actually borrowed money to enable them to maintain their poor' (Protestant Exiles from France, index vol., p. 12). While they did nobly for themselves, the entry in the text shows that they required and received help. Collections were made for them both in England and Scotland (Smiles' Huguenots, 1867, pp. 101, 102; Baird's Rise of the Huguenots, 1880, ii. 292, 293). ² This was the famous Robert Bruce, second son of Sir Alexander Bruce of Airth, who took his arts course at St. Andrews, studied law at Paris, and, returning to his first alma mater, learned theology under Andrew Melville. During the latter period, the citizens, as well as the members of the University, had frequent opportunities of judging of his capacity as a preacher (Melville's Diary, p. 254). That he would himself have preferred St. Andrews to Edinburgh as the sphere of his labours is quite certain, for in his old age he said:—'It [i.e. his Edinburgh charge] was laid upon me sore against my will; for at the same time I had an outward calling to St. Andrews, with the consent of the whole University, and all the gentlemen round about. I have yet all their subscriptions to testify, and surely I liked better to go to St. Andrews, for I had no will of the Court' (Bruce's Sermons, Wodrow Soc., p. 9).

This John Forrett had given the Presbytery a great deal of trouble. With a servant he lay in wait for three hours for Thomas Douglas, the minister of Balmerino, 'invadit him and drew his bluid.' On the 14th of May 1590, he appeared before the Presbytery and confessed the sin of fornication with Euphame Brydy; but, on being desired to satisfy for his offence to Douglas, he became very contemptuous, and at length cut his glove, and casting down the half of it to Douglas, dared him or any of his kin to take it up and meet him in any place. A pretty full summary of the case will be found in Campbell's Balmerino, 1867, pp. 174-177; but none of the extracts from the Register of the Presbytery is quoted quite correctly in that book.

² 'Aprilis 14, 1591 . . . Ordanis Maister Androw Alane to compeir befor the Presbitrie the day aucht dayis' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). He does not seem to have appeared, and for some reason the case was allowed to slumber in the Presbytery for a considerable time. That court had had its attention drawn to him before, for, on the 26th of January 1586-7, it resolved that a letter should be written to the minister of Tranent and Presbytery of Dalkeith, for trial of 'the alledgit sklander rysing agans the Kirk in the persone of Mr. Androw Allane, viz., fornicatione committit in Prestoun and utheris crimes be the said Mr. Androw.' The outcome of this early reference is not quite clear; but in a list of non-residents drawn up by the Presbytery on the 26th of March 1590, among those not deposed, is mentioned 'Mr. Androw Alane vicar of Luicheris.' In November 1593, however, the Presbytery dealt with him, for usurping the office of a reader within the kirk of Leuchars, having been 'deposit in ane Synodall and nocht admittit againe.' He produced another ordinance of Synod, in which he was remitted to the Presbytery of St. Andrews for trial of the slander brought against him. He also produced a supplication from some gentlemen and parishioners of Leuchars, craving the Presbytery to proceed to his trial and to re-admit him. At another meeting he gave in three testimonials, one from the minister and parishioners of Barrie, another from the inhabitants of Dalkeith, Preston, and Prestonpans, and the third from the session of Leuchars. On the 13th of December the 'proces of sklander intendit aganis him befor the sessioun of Sanctandros' was read before the Presbytery, and it was then determined 'to enter in farder tryall of the said slander.' At the next weekly meeting Margaret Scott appeared, and the delation which she had given in against him to the session being read to her, she 'constantl[ie] affirmit the sam to be of veritie.' Witnesses were examined but nothing was elicited save their ignorance in the matter. On the 10th of January 1593-4, the Presbytery took further time to be advised concerning his re-admission as reader, and ordered him in the meantime 'to be cairfullie employit in teaching the youth;' and on the 4th of September 1600 he is again mentioned as 'Vicar of Leucheris' (Ibid.).

² The 23d of September 1591 having been appointed by the Presbytery as the day on which commissioners were to be sent from each parish, 'to testifie of the doctrin and lyfe of ther ministeris, and to complain gif ony occasioun they hed,' there accordingly 'comperit Mrs. William Russell and William Cok commissioneris for the toun of Sanctandros, quho complenis upon ther minister for the not ministratioun of the sacramentis; and hes na thing to say farder aganis ther minister, or vicar Thomas Wood. . . . It is ansuerit be the said Mr. Dauid [Blak] that he acceptit not the ministrie simpliciter on him, but in houp that sic a portioun suld be allotit to him of the parochin as he mycht be abill to deal with in conscience, in administratioun of the Word and sacramentis and exercis of disciplin; and now seing that the parochie takis na ordour for appoynting sic ane portioun as he may deall with, and declairing that it is ane thing impossible for thame to do, he refusit to accept the ministrie of the haill parochin as thei wald have him doing; and desyris thame therfor to provyde for a minister or ma to serve ther turn' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). After this the matter was frequently before the Presbytery, as their Register shows. From the minute of the 18th of November it appears that he had not only 'never as yitt ministrat the sacramentis,' but had now also 'withdrawin him fra the ministratioun of the Word.' He seems indeed to have left the town, for, on three subsequent occasions, the Presbytery resolved that he should be written for. At length, on the 21st of January 1591-2, the Provost, bailies, and council, gave in a bill to the Presbytery, mentioning that Black was unwilling to accept the ministry of their city, and desiring the Presbytery 'to ressave his awin declaratioun heirintill; and in respect thairof to declare the place vacand and fre, that the saming may be provydit be the godlie advys and concurrence of the Presbitrie; and that in the mean tyme, quhill ordinar provisioun wer maid, that thai have the Word and sacramentis ministrat unto thaim.' The Presbytery then received his declaration, fortified by five reasons, and signed by him in their Register. One of the reasons was 'the undewtifull removing of the brother [Mr. John Authinleck], quho occupeit the place befor him, for laik of a litill maintenance; and never indeavoring to supplie the place with any uther.' Another is based on 'the continewall contempt of the Word, utterit by thame, in the personis of the ministeris thairof, quho occupeit ther pulpeit'; and another on 'the alienatioun of thair myndis from his ministerie, uttering the self daylie mair and mair by withdrawing of ther personis from the sessioun.' 'Having sustenit the greiff of thaim as he culd for the space of ane yeir, and finding no amendement by repentance, he declaris that he meins not to disgrace his ministerie any mair amangst thaim; bot pronuncis the place to be void and vacant.' At the next weekly meeting, the Presbytery found that the place was not vacant; and ordered Mr. David to discharge the office of the ministry there, or show cause why he should not. On the 3d of February he again appeared and refused to obey the injunctions of the Presbytery, for certain reasons, which he was ordered to lodge in writing that day eight days. Thirteen reasons, grouped in three classes, were given in by him on the 10th of February, and the Presbytery found that he had not fully accepted the charge, and continued the matter for a week. On the 21st of February, 'The Presbitrie findis it to be ane guid reason: Mr. David Blak hes not acceptit the ministerie of Sanctandrois, nor ordourlie admittit therto; and therfor he suld not be urgit to do the office.' No further action seems to have been taken until the 18th of June 1592, when it was ordained that the parishioners of St. Andrews should be summoned to that day eight days; and on the 29th of that month they were ordained 'to produce the Act of the Generall Assemble anent the planting of thair kirk.' On the 6th of July, 'the congregatioun of St. Androis' was ordained 'to do farther diligence anent the planting of their ministrie.' The next reference to the matter is the one in the text, from which, had it stood alone, it might never have been inferred that Black was not acting then as their minister; yet that seems to have been the case; and the special 'heidis and preceptis,' which he was asked to set down, were probably intended as the basis of an agreement. Nothing apparently came out of all this for some time, for, on the 14th of December, the Presbytery granted the desire of the commissioners of St. Andrews, 'that the pulpitt micht be suppleit be the help of sum brithren, the nixt owlk of solemne fasting appointed be the Kirk.'

¹ This is the last reference to Thomas Wod in the Register. He was now a frail old man. Walter Adamsoun, a tailor, assaulted him on the 20th of March 1591-2. At nine o'clock in the evening, 'under the silence of nycht,' Wod was 'resortand towards his awin hous, unmyndfull of ony injurie heirm or skaith to have bene done to him be any person or personis, bot to have always be Goddis assistance frequentit his wounted rest. Nevertheles the said Walter Adamsoun, movit of quhat spirit unknowin,' or 'rather of the spirit of Sathan as apperit, maist schamfullie umbesett' the 'said Thomas Wood, being ane simpill aigt and impotent man,' unable to resist his wicked and furious attempt. Adamson 'patt handis in the said Thomas be ruggin of his staff fra him,' intending 'to have maist schamfullie murtherit' him. Had it not been for 'the assistance and speciall providence of God Almychtie, be quhois power and mercie he wes encouragit to divulgat this the said Walteris tratorus and bluide mening be crying with lowd voice Murther! Murther! he wes umbesett and murtherit be ane knaiff.' Wod having complained to the magistrates, and Adamsoun having confessed that 'he hed mellit with the said compleanar and wald have bereft him of his staff,' they appointed an inquest. The jury found Adamsoun, by his own confession, 'to have done intollerable wrang' to 'ane simpill and impotent man bering charge in Chrystis kirk and congregatioun of this citie.' Besides, Walter was 'notoriuslie knawin to be sic ane man, swa wyld and dissolute in lyf and conversatioun, na wayis wirthe to susten the societie of guid man (sic), nather yitt to be harberit in sic ane congregatioun.' The trial was on Friday, and he was sentenced to be immediately put into the stocks, there to remain until Sabbath, when he was to be convoyed by the officers to the parish church, and 'placit upon the heichest degre of the penitent stule in quhyt lining or hardin claithis.' After the sermon he was on bended knees to confess his offence and crave forgiveness, then he was to be taken back again to the stocks, from which he was to be released on Monday, in order that he might be set in the jogis in the open market, 'cled in maneir forsaid with ane form of moitar [i.e. mitre] upon his heid, quhairupon salbe writtin and expressit the form of his offence.' He was there again to make confession and ask forgiveness, and then by proclamation to be banished from the town for ever. The process has been copied into the Register of the Presbytery. Wod does not appear to have long survived this attack. Scott confounds him with a contemporary of the same name who was vicar of Carnbee (Fasti, ii. 411); while Laing states that they cannot be identified, as the vicar of St. Andrews had not taken his degree of A.M. at the University (Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, vii. 453); but in the Register of the Presbytery the vicar of Carnbee appears both as Thomas Wod and as Mr. Thomas Wod. There are references however in that Register which seem clearly to imply that the vicar of St. Andrews was not the same man as the vicar of Carnbee. The fame of Thomas Wod of St. Andrews rests entirely on his Psalter (see supra, p. 40, n. 2). Of his early history, says Laing, 'we have no certain information. His own words show that in 1562 he had joined the Reformers, and had commenced his labours on the music adapted to the metrical Psalms, and that in the course of four years his work in four books had been completed. Not being aware of any difference in date of the duplicate volumes, or that his explanatory notes were added at various times, I fell into the common mistake of supposing him to have held the office of vicar for some years previous to 1566. At that period it was not unusual for one person to hold an office while another enjoyed the teinds or emoluments; but the office itself of vicar ceased to be recognised in the Presbyterian Church, although the vicarage teinds were assigned by special grant from the Crown as a stipend to ministers or readers . . . From the Register of the Privy Seal, we further learn that on the 21st March 1575-6, Thomas Wood having obtained from "My Lord Regentis Grace a presentation to the vicarage of Sanct Androis, Mr. John Wynrame, Superintendent of Fyfe, was charged to admit him to the said vicarage." Laing adds, 'This grant of the vicarage teinds was for life, and Wood survived probably till the close of the sixteenth century. One of his marginal notes has the date 1592.' (Proc. of Soc. of Antiq. of Scot., vii. 452, 453.) But it is much more probable that he died that very year, for, as will be seen in a subsequent note (infra, p. 742), Mr. Robert Zuill was presented to the vicarage before the 2d of November 1592.

But these fickle sheep had already cast their longing eyes after another shepherd. On the 14th of May, 1592, the Presbytery ordered 'Mr. Jhon Authinleck to desist fra preching in the kirk of Largow for ony manis request, quhill Mr. Robert Zwill ather be admittit minister of the said kirk or ellis refusit for ane lauchfull caus, becau[s] he is under tryall presentlie; and thairfoir ane writting to be directit t[o] the parochineris of Largow to compeir this day aucht dayis, to schaw if thai have ony ressonable caus to reject the said Mr. Robert Zwill.' Two months later the Presbytery consented 'to proceed to try M. On the 2d of November 1592, 'Comperit M. Robert Zuile, and produceit twa presentaciones to the vicarage of Sanctandros, ane desyring him to be tryed and admittit as reader, the uther as minister. The Presbitrie, efter lang reasoning, thowcht gud to be farder advysit twiching the forme of his admissioun; and in the mean tyme ordanes ane edict to be publishit on Sunday nixtocum opinlie, in the presens of the congregatioun, befoir none, chargeing the parochinaris of St. Andros all and sindrie, both in brugh and land, that hes ony thing to object aganis the said M. The edict having been returned, duly executed and indorsed, and no one appearing to object, the Presbytery, on the 9th of November, ordained that he should teach next Sabbath afternoon in the presence of the whole congregation; and that in the forenoon they should be peremptorily charged to appear next Thursday, to give their allowance or disallowance. On the 16th, 'No man ether in brugh or land compeirand to object aganis M. He desired the Presbytery, on the 22d of March 1592-3, to appoint some of the brethren to design a manse and glebe for him, but the matter was delayed until there should be a larger meeting. On the 24th of March 1592-3, its 'miserable estait' was brought before the Privy Council by the Provost, James Lermonth of Darsie, and his fellow-rulers. The bailies were—Mr. David Russell, Duncan Balfour, Mr. William Cok, and Andrew Ramsay; while William Lermonth was Dean of Guild. The matter in dispute was remitted to certain referees; but, as they gave no verdict, the Provost, bailies, and council (4th April 1593) craved that some other order might be taken. Now, however, they were not the only complainers, for Thomas Lundy, John Hagy, and other five hundred of the inhabitants, stated that 'the commoun guidis, rentis and patrimonie' of St. Andrews 'ar and hes beine delapidat, applyit and convertit to the privat usis and commoditie of certane particulair personis, for the maist part magistrattis of the same cietie.' The list of grievances which they wished redressed is of great length. They craved that order might be taken:—'First, that ane godlie and zealous minister and helpere be providit to Maisteris David Blak and Robert Yuile to this cietie, conforme to the ordinance of the Sinodole Assemblée, that we may have the sacramentis ministrat. Item, ane soleid ordour to be taine for the puiries help and support in this cietie, that the servandis of God have na forder occasioun to compleine of our negligence. Item, to the effect that thir thingis may be performit, that the gift quhilk his Majesteis mother of guid memorie gaif to the toun of the Blak Freiris be productit, to the effect that Mr. David Russell may instantlie restoir to the toun four bollis quheit, quhilk he hes maist wranguslie and injustlie taine furth of the samin gift to himself and his bairnis, and hes upliftit yeirle sen the Reformatioun of Religioun the saidis four bollis quheit.' These appeared in name of the session 'and desyrit most ernstlie the Presbitrie to had hand to the establishing of thair ministrie in the persoun[s] of Maisteris Dauid Black and Robert Wallace.' The second party comprised Johnne Martine, Mr. Thomas Brown, Alexander Schairpe, Arthure Milne, Johnne Zoung, and divers others, who appeared 'in name of the townn and communalte of St. Andros, reporting to the Presbitrie the diligence of the said townn for obeying the ordinance of the Generall Assemblie according to the intimatioun of the Presbitri[e], and produceit for that effect a roll of the subscriptiones of the most part of the inhabitantis for thair consent to Mr. Robert Wallace to be associat to M. The third party consisted of 'the Provost, bailies, Deane of Gild, Alexander Winstar, Thomas Lentroun,* Patrik Guthrie, and sindrie utheris,' who dissented from Wallace's appointment; 'and culd give na uther reasoun of thair dislyking of him except the weaknes of his voice; and being demandit, quhiddir if thei thame selfis, having thair settis so commodiouslie situat towardis the pulpitt, hard his voice or nocht, thei anserit, that for them selfis thei hard him weil yneugh, bot thei fearit that utheris quho satt farther of hard him nocht. The magistrates, 'and ther complicitis disassentaris,' then alleged 'that the subscriptiones and consentis of sic as agreit to him was onlie purchasit and beggit be the sinistrous informatioun of sic as delt privilie in that matter.' On inquiring thoroughly into this allegation the Presbytery found that it was baseless. After summoning all the inhabitants they could not find above thirty-three persons who dissented, and their only reason was 'the imbecillitie and waknes of his voice.' The next step which the magistrates and their party took was to protest, 'that thei suld on na wayes be halden to be ansuerable for a stipend to M. Robert Wallace.' The Presbytery afterwards consulted the masters and students of the New and Auld Colleges and found them all satisfied. David Lindesay, Moderator of the General Assembly, took part in these proceedings. At length, on the 24th of May, 'The brithren, efter lang delay and dealing with the Provost and balles of St. Andros and thair adherentis without any profite, thought gud to follow owt the Act of the Generall Assemblie, in appointing M. reported that he had spoken the magistrates; thei have tane forder to be advysit thairin' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). At the next weekly meeting, 'Mr. David Blak reported that the Provost, balyies, and counsell of the town, had given no ansuer; bot that the sessioun had tane some ordour amonges thameselfis for devyding of the towne; and continewis till this day aucht dayis forder to be advysit thairintill.' On the 5th of July—'Anent the establisching of the ministrie of St. Andros, Mr. David Blak reportit that the sessioun had tane up the names of the holl town of Sanctandros, and had devydit the same in thrie equal partis; and, becaus that Mr. Robert Wallace was apoyntit already be the Generall Assemblie to be fallow helper in the said ministre, desyrit Mr. Robert Zuile suld be requyrit if he wald accept a part of the burden. The said Mr. Robert craveit advysment till that day aucht dayes concerning the acceptatioun thairof' (Ibid.). This expression of the desire to obtain Zuile as a minister of St. Andrews, shows that his name had not been accidentally inserted in the entry in the text. It was probably struck out again because the desire was not carried into effect. On the 26th of July—'Anent the establisching of the ministrie of Sanctandros, it is concludit that, this day aucht dayes without forder delay, according to the divisioun of the town tane alreadilie(?), everie minister be severallie apoyntit to thair awin folkes.' On the 9th of August, 'The Presbitrie gives commissioun and authorizes Mr. David Blak, Mr. Robert Wallace and Zuile, to convine the parochineris of St. Andros, and propone to thame in sick thinges as salbe expedient for the satling of thair ministrie.' A fortnight later, 'M. Robert Zuile produces certane reasones quhy he suld nocht be burdinete with a speciall number of the parochin of Sanctandros; and, he desyring ane new declaratour of his sufficiencie, the Presbitrie declairis him sufficient.' Subsequently an edict was published, charging all the parishioners of St. Andrews who had aught to object against Zuile to do so; but no objection was lodged. His 'swithering' was at last brought to an end. On the 13th of September, 'The questioun being movit, quhidder if Mr. Robert Zuile suld presentlie enter in the equal burden of the ministrie with Mr. David Blak and Robert Wallace or to continow in exhortatioun as befor, efter reason it was concludit be pluralitie of voteis that he suld nocht presentlie enter in the equal burde[n], bot to continew in exhortatioun and catichising of the pepill, as the sessio[un] and ministrie sall think most expedient; and ordanes Mr. David Blak and Robert Wallace to exercis the office of the ministrie fullie, in teaching the Word and administratioun of the sacramentis and discipline' (Ibid.). As will be seen (infra, p. 757) Black and Wallace formally accepted the ministry of St. Andrews upon them on the 19th of September. In Scott's Fasti, ii. 398, Robert Zuill appears as the first and last occupant of the third charge of St. Andrews, and the 13th of September 1593 is given as the date of his admission; but the above extracts show that then he was only an exhorter.

³ The outbreak, with which Patrick Learmonth was charged, resulted from the ill-feeling connected with the municipal election of 1593. The matter is thus referred to by James Melville:—‘On the Michelmes that yeir, the crafts and burgesses of St. Androis changing thair Provost, for the Lard of Darsie, chosit Capitan Wilyeam Murray, quhilk maid Darsie’s frinds to rage sa, that Burley cam under sylence of night, and tuk an honest man out of his hous and caried him away; at the quhilk brave exployt Burley was mutilat of a fingar to begin his warrs withall. ¹ From the Act of Parliament, of 5th June 1592, it appears that 'dyvers of the gentilmen, duelland to landwart of the parochin of Sanctandrois,' had pointed out to Parliament 'the large quantitie and boundis of the parochin,' its 'populous congregatioun,' and 'greit distance of the saidis parrochinaris duellingis frome the said parroche kirk;' and craved the division of the parish, 'and ane ressonabill boundis of the landwart of the same to be erectit in ane severall parroche, for thair better and mair commodious instructioun, offering to big ane kirk and mans thairto upoun thair awin expensis.' Parliament granted the desire of this petition, and divided the following 'tounes and landis' from St. Andrews, and erected them 'in ane severall and distinct parochin . . . to be callit in all tyme cuming the South Kirk of Sanctandrois':—'Thai ar to say Byrehillis, Smiddy-Greine, Balduf, Bonytoun, Walkmylne, Strathvey (sic), Bennefeld, Kynaldie, Kilmerstoun, Karingour, Lamelathen, Langraw, Fedinche, Vnthank, Prior Lethem, Lathoker, Hasliden, Eister and Wester Mortonis.' Parliament further gave them power to build a parish kirk and manse upon any part of these lands which they found to be most convenient, and granted 'to the said parroche kirk all liberties privileges and commodeties that ony uther parroche kirk within this realme hes' (Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, iii. 549). The landward gentlemen were rather slow in carrying their privileges into effect, for the General Assembly, on the 26th of April 1593, ordered them to build their church 'in sick ane part as the saidis parochineris and Presbyteries aggrei upon, narrest the middis of the parroche, betuix and Lambes cum ane yeir, according to thair suite maid to Parliament, and sicklyk to the Assemblie; certifieing thame and they failyie, thay salbe debarrit fra ony benefeit of the kirk of Sanct Androis' (Booke of the Universall Kirk, Ban.  Kinaldy, are now in Dunino, the rest of Kinaldy and Gilmerton are in Cameron, but Bonnytown is still in St. Andrews. The Presbytery do not seem to have taken any further action in the matter until the 1st of January 1595-6, when they ordained 'the gentillmen of the landwart of St. Andros to compeir befor them the next day.' Accordingly, on the 8th, 'comperit Andro Wod of that a suitable site had been found on Priorlethem for those adjacent, and it was resolved to summon the other parishioners to give their concurrence. These do not seem to have complied, for, it was ordained, on the 5th of February, that they should be publicly cited from the pulpit; on the 4th of March, that it should be intimated 'to the landwart of that boundis appointit for the new kirk to be present upon Moninday in the pariche kirk, for setting doun of ane stent;' and, on the 1st of April 1596, that the gentlemen of the landward parish should

¹ At this time there were two John Honymans—father and son—baxters in St. Andrews. The father had become an apprentice in 1564, was elected positor or boxmaster in 1587, 1589, 1593, and 1594, and at length became deacon of his craft in 1596. Four of his sons were admitted as freemen of the same trade, and his descendants continued to follow the calling for more than two centuries in St. Andrews. Thomas Honyman, his direct descendant in the seventh generation, was entered as a freeman to the baxter craft in 1773, and is mentioned in its records as a member in 1789 (Baxters' Books of St. Andrews, MS.). Andrew Honyman, Bishop of Orkney, seems to have belonged to this family. According to the anonymous Life of James Sharp, first printed in 1678, although Honyman's 'father was but a baxter to his trade, and of small means, yet living in a university town, he easily got his sons bred at schools and colleges, dedicating more than one scone of the baking unto the Muses, for he had made all his four sons scholars, who were afterwards all ministers, yet such as might have profited the commonwealth more in following their father's trade of baking, than they have done the Church in following the ministry; being themselves as cakes unturned, neither raw nor roasted' (Miscellanea Scotica, ii. 68, 69).

¹ There is a blank space after this entry. From the words 'condemnit wiche' and 'umquhill' being applied to Agnes Melvill, Jonet Lochequoir and Elspot Gilcrist, it may be safely inferred that all the three had suffered the extreme penalty for their supposed crime. Agnes Melvill had been accused of witchcraft before the session in 1588 (supra, pp. 620-623). Perhaps she may be identified as the second witch said to have been consulted by Patrick Adamson, and described by Sempill as—

'Ane devill duelling in Anstruther,
Exceeding Circes in conceattis,
For changene of Wlisses meatis :
Medusa's craftis scho culd declair,
In making eddars of her hair :
Medea's practiques scho had plane,
That could mak auld men young agane.'

Dalyell's Scotish Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 319.

By an Act of Parliament, of 4th June 1563, consulters of witches, as well as the witches themselves, were to be put to death (Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, ii. 539); but the ecclesiastical discipline to which consulters were subjected was very much milder than might have been expected; for, in 1573, the General Assembly ordained 'all bishops, superintendents, and commissioners to plant kirks, to call all sick persons as salbe suspect to consult with witches before them, at their awin particular visitations, or utherwayes; and if they be found to have consulted with the saids witches, that they cause them make publick repentance in sackcloath upon ane Sonday in tyme of preaching, under the paine of excommunicatioun; and if they be disobedient, to proceed to excommunication, dew admonitions preceeding, (Booke of the Universall Kirk, i. 283). In the Register of St. Andrews Presbytery there are three short but suggestive references to witchcraft within three consecutive months of 1597. The first, which occurs on the 7th of July, runs thus:—'Mr. Nicoll Dalgleische proponit that the Crounner had cravit of him the extract of the depositionis of the witches brunt at St. Androis, quhilk he had grantit be the advyse of his sessioun, and thairfoir cravis the judgment of the Presbytrie: quhilk thai allowe.' These unhappy witches had been examined before the kirk-session of Pittenweem, for Dalgleish was minister of that parish; but had apparently been brought to St. Andrews, and were condemned by the King, when he came to thrust Black and Wallace out of their ministry here; for, part of a letter, written on the 13th of July by Bowes to Burghley, is thus summarised:—‘The King’s proceedings at St. Andrews against the preachers and witches. Many witches executed; their service to the devil’ (Thorpe’s Calendar of State Papers, Scotland, ii. 739). It was on the 12th of next month that the Privy Council discharged commissions of justiciary against witches—not because they had any dubiety as to the punishment merited by ‘witchecraft, sorcerie, enchantment, or sic divilish practizeis, quhairwith the haill land is defyllit,’ nor because his Majesty now perceived that the alleged practices were only delusions, for it is expressly stated that ‘his Heynes intendis to perseveir till that maist odious and abhominable cryme be tryit and punisheit with all extremitie,’ but because such commissions were liable to be abused against innocent persons (Register of Privy Council, v. 409, 410). In referring to this Act of Privy Council, Dr. Robert Chambers has said:—‘At this time, the enthusiastic section of the Church was in a state of discouragement; otherwise the King might not have been able to concede to the representations made to him against witch-commissions. It is too remarkable to be overlooked, that the heat of persecution against these unfortunates was generally in some proportion to the influence of the more zealous clergy, either through their direct agency or through the fear for their reproaches in others’ (Domestic Annals of Scotland, 1874, i. 292). But, as Black and Wallace were conspicuous even among ‘the more zealous clergy,’ the esteemed writer would probably have given his remarks another turn, if he had had the King’s doings at St. Andrews in the previous month before him. On the 17th of August the Presbytery appointed a fast in these terms:—‘Item, because of Goddis jugementis presentlie strykinge be pestilence and famine, as also of the discoverie of the gryt empyre of the deivill in this cuntry be witchecraft, it is ordanit that ane publik fast and humiliatioun be intimat this nixt Sabothe, to be celebrat the tua Sabothis immediatlie followinge.’ And on the 1st of September there is this other entry in the Register of the Presbytery:—‘As also a supplicatioun to be maid to his Majestie for repressing of the horrible abuse by carying a witch about; and Mr. Robert Wilichie ordanit to request the magistratis of Sanctandris to stay the same thair.’ The witch here referred to was no doubt carried about to detect other witches (see Booke of the Universall Kirk, iii. 937, 938); in all likelihood she was none other than Margaret Aitken, ‘the great witch of Balwery’ (see Spottiswoode’s History, Spot. Soc. iii. 66, 67; Chambers’s Domestic Annals, i. 291; Register of Privy Council, v. 410, n.); and so it is plain that at least one Presbytery, despite its zeal against witchcraft, emphatically disapproved of such a method of discovering witches.

ernest incalling upon the holy name of God, ordanit the electioun to proceid in this maner: to witt, Maister Androw Meluill, Rectour of the Universite, and remanent membris thair of, quha wer elderis this last yeir being removit, the haill remanent sessioun remaning be voting electit elderis of thame that wes removit, quhilk being done, thai enterit agane in sessioun; and eftir four or fyve utheris personis elderis being also removit, the remanent sessioun be voting electit of thame that wes removit elderis; and safurth successive, four or fyve brethering elderis and deaconis being removit, the remanent sessioun remaning electit and chusit elderis and deaconis, quhill the haill number of the brethering passit throche. ² This Mr. Jhone Heklein—or, as he is named on his tombstone in the Cathedral burying-ground of St. Andrews, M · IOHAN · ECHLIN · A · PITTADROV—was an elder brother of that ‘Robertus Echlyne’ who was laureated at St. Andrews University in 1596—‘pridie kalendas sextileis’—who became minister of Inverkeithing and afterwards Bishop of Down and Connor. Monteith gives the age of Mr. John at his death as 52 instead of 32 (Theater of Mortality, 1713, pp. 118, 119), and this has so far misled the Rev. John R. Echlin that he supposes him to be the uncle instead of the brother of the Bishop (Genealogical Memoirs of the Echlin Family, second ed., pp. 24, 32).

'By this malitius craftie devys and convoy war these guid honest men thus wayes maist innocentlie and unjustlie vexed and banissed out of the realme from thair wyffes and childring (sax yeires), and at thair retourning warse handlit.' Melville afterwards relates (Ibid. pp. 317, 318), how he 'purchassit, be the King's awin speciall cear and favour, ane act in favours of the honest men of St. Androis, James Smithe and Jhone Walwode, for retourning of tham from exyll to thair awin countrey, citie, hous, wyff, and childring.' A year after the declaration of good will recorded in the text, James Smith was cruelly murdered, in returning from Anstruther to St. Andrews, two hours after leaving James Melville's house. Knowing 'the innocencie and gudnes of the man sa weill, the vylnes of his maist wicked enemies, and the veritie of his cause,' Melville was for several days almost drowned in a deadly and senseless despair. He relieved his feelings by indulging his 'poeticall passioun,' and in preserving the thirty-six stanzas he then wrote, he characterises them as 'bot a dwabbling countrey ryme, meittar to be swipped away with the mouse-wobbes, nor byd as a picture in the palace of Apollo' (Ibid. pp. 421-433).

While expressing his readiness to defend, either before the King or Council, anything that he had said, he was 'movid, with all humilitie and submissioun of mynd, to use a Declinatour of this judgment, at the least, in prima instantia.' The hearty way in which he was backed up by the other ministers, his being ordered on the 2d of December to confine himself beyond the North Water, and the King's inexorable determination that he should not return to St. Andrews, are all well known. See Melville's Diary, Wod. Soc., pp. 419, 509-516; Spottiswoode's History, Spot. Soc., iii. 13-26; Calderwood's History, Wod. Soc., v. 453-498; Petrie's History, 1662, ii. 520-524; M'Crie's Melville, 1824, i. 395-400, ii. 452, 453; Lee's Lectures, ii. 130-137; Register of Privy Council, v. 326, 327, 334-336, 340-342, 345-348. The last-named volume, p. 674, reveals the loving regard of some of Black's flock for him in another way than petitioning. On the 26th of January 1596-7, they had to become cautioners for one another, to the extent of £100 each, to answer when required, 'concerning thair unlawfull convoca-tioun in thair convoy of Mr. David Blak, agaitwart to his present waird, efter he wes convict of ane tressonable cryme.' The following extracts do not appear to have ever been printed before:—'Januar 27 [1596-7]. . . The quhilk day compeirit Mr. George Mearnis, Alexander Winchister, Chairlis Watsoun, from the sessoun and counsell of St. Androis, quha regratit that they wantit the comfort of the Word at those tymes, quhilk Mr. David Blak usit to teache, and desyrit thair help. Quhairunto it wes ansuerit that wordely they wer bereft of that comfort, for it wes they them selfis that wer the causis of it; and thairfor desyris them to send thair commissioneris to his Majestie for the restoring the said Mr. David to his place agane' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). 'Februar 18 [1596-7]. The quhilk day, after the incalling of the name of God, the commissioneris of St. Androis compeiring as befor craving that the place might be occupieit. At the quhilk tym Mr. Robert being in the Westland, the Presbytrie ordenit the moderatour, Mr. Nicoll [Dalglesch], and Mr. James Meluill, to wrett ane ansuer to his Majestie in thair name’ (Ibid.). The obnoxious ‘speiches’ had been made in the ‘Little Kirk of Edinburgh,’ and had reference to Lyndesay’s conduct in the case against Black.

² Two months before this, the General Assembly had petitioned the King, that, as Black had ‘obeyt sick things as was injoinit to him,’ he would ‘give him libertie to returne to his flock’ (Booke of the Universall Kirk, iii. 901). On the 7th of April, ‘The Provost of St. Androis, Mris. William Russell, George Mearnis, bailyeis, with Patrik Bonckill, commoun clark,’ had appeared before the Presbytery, and ‘productit ane letter direct fra his Majestie, ordeining the Presbytrie to provide for the pulpeit of St. Androis. Die vix^{to} Julii, 1597.

This is the first day that Mr. George Gledstanis minister enterit in the session, and maid prayer to God, and procedit to the office of the ministre in discipline, conforme to the ordour of the sessioun.¹

The first enteres of Mr. George
minister.

Early in July apparently the King was in St. Andrews, and he not only commanded Lyndesay to come there, and prosecute his action against Wallace before him and the Commissioners of Assembly, but he himself interrupted Wallace publicly in the application of his sermon, for which Andrew Melville 'rebukit the King maist scharplie, thretning him with feirfull judgments gif he repented nocht.' Wallace had declined the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, but they speedily suspended him from his ministry, and debarred Black from St. Andrews without even citing him before them (Melville's Diary, 417-419; Calderwood's History, v. 648-650; Booke of the Universall Kirk, iii. 940). On the 15th of July 'compeirit befor the Presbyterie the Provost of the citie of Sct. Androis, and compleaned upon Mr. Jhone Authinleck, wha spak that day in the second rounge of the exerceis, for compearing the toun of Sct. Androis to a galed hors, that flinging and plounging cust the ryders, &c. The Presbyterie ordeanit the said Mr. Jhone to put in wryt the reasounes that moved him to use the said applicatioun, contrair to the Actes of the Generall Assemblie, and the groundes of text that he biggit upon; that the breithring might judge thairone the nixt day; ordeaning the said Provost to be present the said nixt day, for prosecuting his complent, giff sa it pleasit him' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). That day week 'compeirit Mr. Jhone Authinleck and gaiff in his ansuer, as was appointed the day befor, for warranding of his applicatioun usit be him upon the toun of Sct. Androis. The quhilk the breithring allowit weill of; and calling for the Provost of Sct. Androis, or anie in his name, to heir what fordar he haid against the said Mr. Jhone, nether the said Provost nor naine for him compeirit, sa that mater deseritit' (Ibid.).

thairupon, they wald confort with all kynd of assistance help and forderance in the samyn' (Ibid.). In striking contrast with this cautious expression of goodwill towards the new minister, is the following hearty commendation of the old: — 'The whilk day also the sayd whole brethren gave testimonie to Mr. David Black off fidelite, honestie and all dewtie, in the discharge of his ministrie and utherwyse' (Ibid.). According to one account, before the arrival of the Commissioners, the 'great dissastour fallin out amangis the clergie of St. Androis . . . had devydit that haill cittie in factionis'; and Gladstanes, at the time of his appointment, was 'thocht weill of and lykit be his Majestie and Commissioneris of the kirk, . . . and the hail honest citizenis of the cittie' (Moysie's Memoirs, Ban. Club, p. 134). His kindly welcome by the citizens seems to have been largely due to the King's policy in prevailing on James Melville to preach on the occasion of his reception. That divine had the greater pleasure of placing David Black in the charge of Arbirlot, which Gladstanes had just vacated (Melville's Diary, pp. 422, 423). Martine states that the future Archbishop was brought to St. Andrews at this time, 'of purpose to ballance and poize Mr. Andrew Melvill, and to guard the Universitie and students against his principles, and to fence them from being tinged with his seditious and turbulent way; and many a hote bickering there was betwixt them thereupon' (Reliquiæ Divi Andree, p. 251). The King had no doubt taken the measure of the man, who was afterwards to address him as his 'earthly Creator,' and to describe himself and fellow-bishops as 'your Majesties creatures' (M'Crie's Melville, ii. 132, n.).

catechising.

The bretheren ordinis Mr. David Lindesay minister to teache upon Maister Calvins Catechise,¹ and the bairnis to ansuer him conform to the Commoun Cathechise.²

¹ Calvin's Catechism, declared, in the First Book of Discipline, to be 'the most perfite that ever yit was used in the Church,' was usually adjoined to the Book of Common Order. It was reprinted in the second volume of Dunlop's Confessions, and in Dr. Bonar's Catechisms of the Scottish Reformation.

² I do not remember to have elsewhere observed any of the catechisms then in use in Scotland distinguished as the 'Commoun Cathechise.' It is not likely to have been the Palatine, but it may have been the Little Catechism (see supra, p. 809 and n.). That, judging from the numbers which the old Edinburgh printers and booksellers had on hand when they died, was certainly the commonest. It was then known as the Single Catechism; while Calvin's was called the Double Catechism, because, perhaps, the Little Catechism was subjoined to it (Bannatyne Miscellany, ii. 199, 201, 205, 212-215, 224, 234, 236, 243, 259, 260, 264). It is quite possible that Craig's 'Shorte Summe of the whole Catechisme, wherein the Question is proponed and answered in few wordes, for the greater ease of the commoun people and children,' may have been familiarly called the Commoun Catechism. It was reprinted by Dr. Bonar, in 1866; and by Mr. Law, in 1883, in facsimile, from the original edition of 1581. If the object of the Kirk-session was to make it easy for the 'bairnis to ansuer,' they could not have done better than prescribe Craig's 'Shorte Summe,' or his briefer 'Forme of Examination.' The latter is not only included in Dr. Bonar's collection, but will be found in the second volume of Dunlop's Confessions, in a collection of Confessions of Faith, printed, by the Cameronians, in 1725, 1771, and 1785, and in Edward Irving's Confessions of the Church of Scotland. Of all the old catechisms, Davidson's gives the best idea of the homely methods of instruction then followed.

At the three successive meetings of Presbytery, Wilkie and his colleagues were instructed to continue their labours in this affair, and it afterwards drops out of sight. ¹ Omitted.

² In 1591 the Presbytery had appointed Wilkie to teach the Word, minister the sacraments, and exercise discipline, within the bounds of his parish (supra, p. 683, n.); in September 1592 a witness, before the kirk-session of St. Andrews, alleged that 'Mr. Robert Wilkie baptizit hir barn in St. Leonardis kirk' (supra, p. 728); and on the 25th of November 1596, 'Robert Kay and Jonett Methuen, adulteris in the parochin of St. Leonardis,' appeared before the Presbytery, 'confessit the fault, and wer ordenit to satisfie according to Act of the Generall Assemblie in the said kirk' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). The following entry shows that St. Leonards had a kirk session as well as a minister of its own. 'Apryll 14, [1597] . . . Compeired Robert Kay, who had committed adulterie with Jonett Methuen, duelling in St. Leonardis parochie. Mr. Robert Wilkie thair minister reportit that the said Robert had satisfieit in thair kirk according to the ordour, and thairfoir cravit that he sould be receavit in the bosome of the Kirk agane; quhairfoir the brithering refarris him to his particular sessioun' (Ibid.). That there was some uncertainty, however, as to the bounds of St. Leonards parish is apparent. 'Octobris 21, [1596] . . . The questioun being proponit be Mr. Daid Blak quhat wes the boundis of the parichun of St. Leonardis, the dissisioun quhairoff wes refarrit till Mr. Nicoll Dalglesche wer present' (Ibid.). The trouble in which Black was speedily involved (see supra, p. 823, n.) doubtless prevented the 'redding of the marches' at that time. Wilkie seems to have felt the combined duties of Principal and minister to be rather hard on him; and therefore, on the 8th of February 1598-9, 'desyrit of the Presbytrie that it micht be leisum to Mris. William Marche, Daniel Wilkie, and the rest of the maisteris of philosophie in that colledge that ar upon the exerceis, to helpe him upon Soundayis efter none; quhilk desyre the brithering grantit' (Ibid.).

 the place of Nydie. And the said Patrik Lermonth, being

² The attention of the Presbytery of St. Andrews had been directed to this case, on the 4th of September, by a commissioner sent from the Presbytery of Cupar. In his statement Agnes Forsyth is described as 'sumtyme spous to Hercules Myretoun, and dauchter to Margaret Bruce, Lady Bammulo;' and the marriage is said to have been performed by 'Robert Arthour in St. Androis and Mr. Andro Allane vicar of Leucheris.' The Presbytery ordered the ministers of the parishes in which the parties and witnesses resided to call them before their respective sessions, and to give in their reports next week, as also to summon them all to that meeting of Presbytery. Neither parties nor witnesses appeared on the 11th; but on the 18th of September, Glaidstanes reported that Robert Arthour had promised to come, 'and in cais he faylit wes content that the Presbyterie suld hald that mater quhairof he wes accusit pro confesso.' Witnesses were also examined and he was found guilty. The Presbytery therefore ordained 'the ministeris of Sanctandrois to charge him publictlie out of pulpit to compeir befoir the Synodall Assemblie at Dunfermling, thair to heir the sentence of the Kirk pronuncit aganis him; and the saidis ministeris to charge the said William Arthour befoir thame and report thair diligence to the Synode' (Register of St. Andrews Presbytery). FOR convenience the two parts have been paged consecutively. The references to pages between v-lx, and 1-486, will be found in the first part, and the others in the second. As in many instances it has been impossible to distinguish the various persons bearing the same name, and in others to identify the same individual, so when a name without any designation is followed by a number of references, it must be understood that these do not necessarily refer to the same person.
